CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 24, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. MCCUMBER and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

LAND AT CORSICANA, TEX.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, at the top of page 5467 of the RECORD this morning it reads:

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on Public Lands—

Reported House bill 12013. I did not represent myself as a member of that committee. I am not a member of it. I did not speak for the committee. I ask that the change may be made to comport with the fact. As a Member of the Senate I asked that a certain order be entered, which was entered, but I did not represent myself as a member of the Committee on Public Lands or attempt to speak for the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The correction will be made as requested.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if it has not been the general rule in the past, where any public lands have been disposed of, that the bill has gone to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think not in a case of this kind. The bill simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Corsicana, Tex., certain land for alley purposes in connection with the purchase of a site for a public building in that city. The usual course is to refer such bills, since I have been in the Senate, at least, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and not to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are a great many of such bills that do go to the Committee on Public Lands. I have no objection to this bill going to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but I simply say that many of them have been passed on by the Public Lands Committee, and I wondered whether it was the rule of the Senate or whether it was simply to be made an exception.

Mr. CULBERSON. As far as I know, there is no rule of the Senate on the subject; it is merely the practice, in my experience, to refer such bills to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which passes upon the purchase of the site and the construction of the building.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Texas if it is true that we have any public lands in Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. None whatever.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was rising to that point. We have none there.

Mr. CULBERSON. Absolutely none. The State retained, when it entered into the Union, all the public domain within its limits belonging to the Republic of Texas originally.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understood it. This is land in Texas which was purchased by the Government for the purpose——

Mr. CULBERSON. Of erecting a public building.

Mr. SMOOT. For a public building?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is all.

Mr. SMOOT. And the bill proposes to transfer an alley or a part of an alley?

Mr. CULBERSON. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer to the city of Corsicana an alley for certain purposes.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, in confirmation of the view of the Senator from Texas, I think it is only a few weeks ago that there came before the Senate the question of the reference of a bill providing for the purchase of additional land for a life-saving station—that is, to enlarge the site—and it was then held that the proper reference was to the Committee on Commerce rather than to any other committee. This seems to be precisely analogous to that case.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 405) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and has appointed Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. FERRIS, and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the bill (H. R. 18336) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Gorham, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the purchase and control by the Government of the express companies of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Central Labor Union of Arecibo, P. R., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a department of agriculture and labor in that Territory, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

He also presented a petition of Quinsigamond Valley Lodge, Independent Order of Good Templars, of Worcester, Mass., and a petition of the Scandinavian Lake Association (Inc.), of Shrevesburg, Mass., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BACON. I present resolutions adopted by the organization of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at Augusta, Ga., which they ask may be presented to the Senate as a memorial. The memorial is short, and I ask that it be read. It is on the subject of the employees' compensation act, I will state.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved by Lodge 717, Irvin Division of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, at Augusta, Ga., That we are opposed to the passage of the bill now pending before the Congress of the United States, known as the employees' compensation act, for the following, among many other, reasons:

1. Under existing laws employees of railroad companies can have resort to the same tribunal established by law for other litigants, and in the end obtain substantial justice, and there is no sufficient reason why a new tribunal should be established and new methods of procedure adopted for such employees.

2. Because the enactment of said bill would not diminish the delays and difficulties in the way of said employees in obtaining what they are entitled to for injuries.

3. Because said bill clothes the adjuster with power, which if it is abused, and this might be the case, could be used with great injustice to said employees.

4. Because said bill limits the extent of the recoveries.

5. Because the recoveries allowed by said bill are too small and put a cheap price upon labor and the lives and limbs of laboring people.

Resolved further, That our secretary furnish copies of the foregoing resolution to the Hon. H. M. Stanley, commissioner of commerce and labor for the State of Georgia, and the Hon. A. O. BACON and the Hon. HOKE SMITH, Senators from the State of Georgia, with the request that they present this as our memorial to the Senate of the United States; and the Hon. THOMAS W. HARDWICK, Representative in Congress from this congressional district, and that he present this our memorial to the House of Representatives, and that our said Senators and Representatives are respectfully urged to oppose the passage of said bill.

Witness the hand of the secretary and the official seal.

[SEAL.] J. L. BEARDEN.

Mr. CULLOM presented memorials of sundry members of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, residents of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against a reduction in the appropriation for the maintenance of the Forest Service, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Pekin Camp, No. 25, Department of Illinois, United Spanish War Veterans, of Pekin, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 117, Bartenders' Union, of Belleville, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation governing the granting of licenses for barrooms in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Bradley and Fairbury, in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Park Street Congregational Church, of Mazon, Ill., and a petition of sundry citizens of New Boston, Ill., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LIPPITT. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, and approved by the governor, relative to the Federal inspection of seagoing barges. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January session, A. D. 1912.

Resolution recommending to Congress the passage of House bill No. 17731, providing for the Federal inspection of seagoing barges.

Whereas there has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States House bill No. 17731, providing for the Federal inspection of all seagoing barges of 100 gross tons or over, and providing for the issuance of a certificate of inspection wherever such barges are found to be suitably equipped and in proper seaworthy condition; and

Whereas the loss of life along the shores of the State of Rhode Island is much increased by the operation of unseaworthy barges, which are in many cases without lifeboats, anchors, cables, or life preservers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island heartily approves of the provisions of said bill and respectfully requests our Senators and Representatives in Congress to urge the passage of said bill, and the secretary of state is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, April 13, 1912.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution approved by his excellency the governor on the 10th day of April, A. D. 1912.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid the date first above written.

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. LIPPITT presented a petition of the Blackstone Valley Building Trades Council, of Pawtucket, R. I., and a petition of members of the Rhode Island State Conference, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers of America, praying for the passage of the so-called employers' liability and workmen's compensation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Central Grange, No. 34, Patrons of Husbandry, of Apponaug, R. I., praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system and remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to permit the coloring of oleomargarine in imitation of butter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wickford, Portsmouth, and East Greenwich, all in the State of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WORKS. I present four petitions containing 97 signatures of citizens of California, remonstrating against the Owen medical bill. A short letter accompanies the petitions. I ask that the petitions and letter lie on the table, and that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petitions were ordered to lie on the table, and the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. JONES. I have also a letter with reference to the homestead conditions in the several instances in connection with difficulties in taking up lands in the West. I should like to have the letter printed in the RECORD, without reading, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPOKANE, WASH., April 16, 1912.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Homesteading conditions here are not as they have been in the Middle States and Columbia River Valley. Most homesteads are now among the foothills and mountains. The land is usually covered with the poorer kinds of forest trees, the valuable timber having been taken by squatters. It is difficult to clear land of this character, and when it is ready for the plow it must be stirred and exposed to the atmosphere a year or two before crops can be raised. I have been told that this is on account of the turpentine in the soil. In Eastern and Middle States, where hardwood timber prevailed, or on the prairie, crops were grown the first year of seed sowing.

The following facts relate to homesteaders who have lived in the north half of township 35 north, range 41 west, Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington. Incidents occurred during the past two years:

A mother and four small children alone all winter. Husband obliged to be 300 miles away at work. Nearest neighbor a widow with young daughter. Three feet of snow, 4 miles of poor road or trail to country post office, and 18 miles to a physician.

A man, wife, and baby girl from New England spent two years finding a homestead. Made wagon trip 100 miles with family; built cabin; made other improvements; remained about a year. Hardship of winter and prospect of four years more too much for the mother, and they gave up.

Fine elderly man left invalid wife in Pennsylvania and came here to homestead, hoping to be able to secure a home for them in old age. Lived on his claim about four years, making many improvements preparatory to bringing his wife. Last fall, sick himself and disheartened at the prospect of still another winter alone, he sold relinquishment for less than $100 and went away heartbroken. He had spent years at hard work and received nothing for it. If he had been on Canadian land he would have had title and could have arranged to keep his home.

An industrious Italian, with wife and family, after holding homestead about three years spent summer and fall working for winter "grub stake" on a State road. Contractor failed. Worry over approaching winter and no food supply was too much for him, and he was sent to an insane asylum. The new law permitting five months' absence would have made his burden much lighter.

Man with family from St. Louis filed on land, built a good cabin, cleared considerable land, but he was poor and she did not dare remain alone with children. They gave up because of the prospect of five years and no chance to get away to earn food.

Man and wife with family of five small children moved on a homestead in early spring. Deep snow and only a tent. Remained four years, husband necessarily absent to earn food. Wife became so nearly insane she imagined she heard voices about her in the forest. Finally the husband remained at home to care for the children and she spent last winter in Spokane scrubbing and washing and sending the family money to live on.

Many other similar instances could be given in the history of this new township where unreasonable hardship has been suffered by homesteaders. These people, and thousands of others similarly situated, are depending upon you to use every influence in your power to get prompt and favorable action upon the new homestead bill. The measure is humane and reasonable and ought by all means to become a law at once.

Respectfully,
F. C. VAN DE WALKER.

Mr. KERN. I have a letter from a distinguished citizen, former Attorney General of the United States, on the subject of the prevailing speed mania resulting so disastrously. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, April 19, 1912.

Hon. JOHN W. KERN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The appalling results of the speed mania which seems to possess the world are full of suggestion. It is not merely upon the sea that this mania needs to be curbed; and it is in the power of the Congress of the United States, and only of the Congress of the United States, to curb it so far as our railroads are concerned. One scarcely picks up a newspaper without reading of some railroad accident caused by this mania. Of course, so far as trolley lines, which are generally intrastate, and automobiles are concerned, they are beyond the jurisdiction generally of Congress; but, so far as the great trunk line railroads doing an interstate business are concerned, it is entirely competent and, in my judgment, it is the duty of Congress to legislate in such a way as to put a stop to the unnecessarily and unreasonably high rates of speed, which can not be done and will not be done by any of these great corporations themselves.

If the New York Central lines put on an 18-hour train from Chicago to New York, the Pennsylvania and other lines find in that an excuse and apparent necessity for doing the same thing, and vice versa.

I may say that it is ordinarily more important that travelers shall know the time of their arrival at their destination than that a part of the time a few hours be saved on a long journey; and it is a matter of common knowledge that a very large per cent of the fast trains do not and can not maintain their schedules.

It seems to me, therefore, that you can not render to your country a greater service than not only to assist in the legislation touching the manifestation of this craze for speed upon the water, but likewise upon the land, and as one of your constituents I ask you to do it.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. H. MILLER.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Woodbury, Hartford, New Haven, Norwich, Danbury, and Bridgeport, all in the State of Connecticut, praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a highway from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., as a memorial to Abraham Lincoln, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Business Men's Association of Waterbury, Conn., praying for the adoption of 1-cent letter postage, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of members of the faculty of the Technical High School of Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for vocational education, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of 26 citizens of Newport, R. I., remonstrating against the enforcement of the so-called Taylor system of shop management in navy yards, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3638) for the relief of Norton P. Chipman, submitted an adverse report (No. 654) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

S. 3909. A bill for the relief of John O. Nelson (Rept. No. 655);

S. 2559. A bill for the relief of L. L. Scherer (Rept. No. 656); and

S. 3758. A bill for the relief of Paul G. Morgan (Rept. No. 657).

UNINCORPORATED JOINT-STOCK ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill and to have it read. After it is read I wish to submit just a few remarks to the Senate upon it.

The bill (S. 6495) to amend the law in reference to suits and prosecutions against unincorporated joint-stock associations was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in any proceeding, civil or criminal, under any act of Congress, it shall be ascertained that the defendant or any party to the proceeding is a joint-stock association and has not been chartered or incorporated, it shall be sufficient to describe the said defendant or the said party to the proceeding by the name by which it is usually known or under which it transacts its business, and it shall not be necessary to name or designate the individuals who comprise the said association; and all indictments that may be found against any such joint-stock association shall be sufficient, if otherwise valid, if they designate the defendant as a joint-stock association, by the name by which it is usually known or under which it transacts its business, without setting forth the names of the individuals who compose it or the names of the stockholders thereof.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I want just a moment or two to call the attention of the Senate to the bill, because I consider it one of grave importance, before it goes to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. There was a decision in one of the Federal circuits last week that the Adams Express Co. is not indictable because it is neither a corporation nor an individual. I am not criticizing that decision. I merely want to read a reference to the decision, which appeared in the Washington Post:

The decision rendered by Federal Judge Hollister declaring that the Interstate Commerce Commission has no regulative jurisdiction over express companies looks to be, at first blush, as hard a facer for the Government as the recent Supreme Court ruling upholding the monopoly clause in the patent laws. Judge Hollister finds that an indictment against the Adams Express Co. on the ground of overcharging is invalid for the reason that the company is neither an individual nor a corporation, but a stock association, and that it would be necessary to proceed against its 10,000 stockholders in order to secure its indictment. The interstate-commerce laws, it seems, fail to take cognizance of other than corporations and individuals, and should Judge Hollister's decision stand, the recent investigation of the express companies, which revealed a maze of alleged infractions of the laws, comes to nothing.

Mr. President, I am not prepared to say whether Judge Hollister is right or wrong. I am inclined to think he is right. The Adams Express Co., which, in my judgment, is one of the most oppressive monopolies in the land, has been defying the law for a long time. It is not a corporation, but it is a joint-stock association, and therefore it does not come under the definition of a corporation, and in order to sue it at common law you would have to sue all its stockholders.

We had the same trouble in Maryland. We sued the Adams Express Co. over and over again as a corporation. Then we sued it by the name under which it transacted its business. The courts held in every instance that it was not suable. We could not sue the company and could not indict the company, and there it stands absolute proof against the interstate-commerce law, unless we change the law.

In Maryland we had to change the law, and we adopted a provision of this sort. This statute was passed in Maryland, which is to overcome the objections that the Adams Express Co. made to every suit that was brought against it, civil or criminal:

It shall be sufficient in any suit, pleading, or process, either at law or in equity, or before any justice of the peace, by or against any joint-stock company or association, to describe the said joint-stock company or association by the name or title by which it is commonly known, or by or under which its business is transacted.

Now, this law, unfortunately, was changed in Maryland afterwards, and I think the subsequent law is not an improvement upon that law. But I introduced the bill, and I have just risen to direct the attention of the Interstate Commerce Committee to it, for the purpose of remedying the objection that arises under this decision, which has really made this company unanswerable to the civil or criminal process of this land.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask its reference to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I think it belongs there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reference will be to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA.

Mr. McCUMBER. I send to the desk a bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, and as the bill is the result of the work of the New York State mayors' conference, I would ask that the letter which explains it may be read and printed. It is short.

The bill (S. 6496) for the protection of passengers on ocean vessels was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no vessel of over 5,000 tons gross tonnage shall be cleared with passengers from any port in the United States unless there shall have been advertised and printed on each ticket issued for passage on such vessel the number of passengers that she is licensed to carry, the number of persons usually composing her crew, and the total number of persons for whom she purports to be provided with life-saving facilities capable of keeping human beings afloat entirely above water for a reasonable time in ordinary weather.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The letter was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

NEW YORK STATE MAYORS' CONFERENCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City, April 22, 1912.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I learn that Congress has referred to various committees many bills prepared with a view to remedying the conditions disclosed by the Titanic disaster.

Without any exception known to me, these bills are designed to change existing laws specifying the character or number of life-saving appliances on passenger vessels leaving our ports.

There appears to be slight probability of any of these bills being enacted for some weeks or months to come.

In view of these facts, a group of citizens in this city have caused, with expert advice, the preparation of the following short bill, capable of immediate enactment and laying upon no one any unreasonable burden whatever:

"Whereas much time must elapse before any well-considered governmental or intergovernmental change can be effected in laws requiring life-saving facilities on ocean passenger vessels: Therefore

"Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no vessel of over 5,000 tons gross tonnage shall be cleared with passengers from any port in this country, unless there shall have been advertised and printed on each ticket issued for passage on her the number of passengers that she is licensed to carry, the number of persons usually composing her crew, and the total number of persons for whom she purports to be provided with life-saving facilities capable of keeping human beings afloat entirely above water for a reasonable time in ordinary weather."

An earlier and slightly different form of this measure is now being urged upon their respective Members of Congress by the mayors of the largest cities throughout the country, including the mayors of 41 of the 49 cities in New York State and the following outside this State:

Hon. James H. Preston, mayor of Baltimore, Md.
Hon. Clifford B. Wilson, mayor of Bridgeport, Conn.
Hon. Jacob Haussling, mayor of Newark, N. J.
Hon. Rudolph Blankenburg, mayor of Philadelphia, Pa.
Hon. Ira W. Stratton, mayor of Reading, Pa.
Hon. John Von Bergen, jr., mayor of Scranton, Pa.
Hon. Frederick W. Donnelly, mayor of Trenton, N. J.
Hon. Frank W. Rockurn, mayor of Akron, Ohio.
Hon. John F. Fitzgerald, mayor of Boston, Mass.
Hon. Michael A. Scanlon, mayor of Lawrence, Mass.
Hon. George N. Seger, mayor of Passaic, N. J.
Hon. S. P. Seifert, mayor of Roanoke, Va.
Hon. Joseph D. Smith, mayor of Wilmington, N. C.

It is the belief here that publicity stimulates self interest swiftly, and is therefore more likely to prove speedily effective than slowly stringent legislation, which will undoubtedly be enacted later. It is also the belief that such a law as proposed in this letter would slacken public clamor, which must hamper lines in an effort to do their best.

On behalf of the municipal executives who are urging the enactment of a law in which these ideas are incorporated, and on behalf also of the group of New Yorkers who believe that the immediate enactment of such legislation would at once stimulate the lines to devote to life-saving facilities time, talent, and money heretofore expended on bulkhead devices and luxurious fittings, I ask that you seriously consider either the speedy introduction of such a measure or, in case any bill of similar character has already been introduced, a motion so as to amend such bill that it may substantially conform to the ideas expressed in the bill above set forth.

Very truly, yours, W. P. CAPES, Secretary.

A bill (S. 6537) for the relief of Catherine Maroney; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PERCY. I present a joint resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 102) relative to the rebuilding of certain levees on the Mississippi River and its tributaries was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas numerous crevasses have occurred in the levees on the Mississippi River which have been constructed in whole or in part by the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river; and

Whereas it is imperatively necessary that the crevasses be closed before the June rise in said river; and

Whereas the House of Representatives has already passed a river and harbor bill which carries an item of $3,500,000 for the general improvement of said river, for the building of levees, etc., between Head of Passes and Cape Girardeau; and

Whereas it will, in all probability, be several weeks before the appropriations carried in the river and harbor act will become available; and

Whereas this delay will render it impossible for the Secretary of War to close these crevasses before the June rise: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to rebuild, by contract or otherwise, in accordance with such plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission as may be approved by the Chief of Engineers, such portions of the levees on the Mississippi River and its tributaries as may have been or may hereafter be broken by the existing flood in said rivers, and the sum of $1,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for this purpose, out of funds remaining in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall keep an account of the actual cost of all work done under the provisions of this resolution, and upon completion of the work he shall report the total cost thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a sum equal to the cost so reported to be deducted from the unexpended balance of appropriations that may hereafter be made for improving Mississippi River from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River and to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 24, 1912.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Mr. BRYAN obtained the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill on which the Senator from Florida gave notice of his desire to-day to address the Senate, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the bill now under consideration is of such vast importance that I presume its provisions have been carefully studied by most Senators. If I thought that I could support this bill, instead of making any argument in its favor I should leave it to those much better qualified, who have given more mature study to the question. My only purpose in speaking at this time is that, being opposed to the bill, I am not sure that I shall be present when action is had upon it, and because I can not support it I think it is due to myself that I state the reasons for my opposition.

Anyone who will examine the record prepared by the commission appointed in pursuance of the resolution to provide an investigation into employers' liability and workmen's compensation must recognize and appreciate the long and patient hearing and careful consideration given to all the various propositions presented. I might go further and say that the commission itself is under obligations to many of those representing both employers and employees, who, after much study on this question, came before the commission to express views which were well considered and matured. The commission, after its investigation, is of the opinion that the choice of compensation acts and of liability acts, or the proper system to be inaugurated in this country, lies between two methods, namely:

(a) A fund is collected by imposing an assessment in the nature of an insurance premium upon all employers, in accordance with a more or less definite classification, out of which fund, administered under governmental supervision, the injured employees or dependents are paid.

(b) The burden is put upon each employer to compensate his injured employees or their dependents in case of death by paying the amounts fixed directly to the employees or dependents.

The commission correctly state that a type of the first method is perhaps best represented by the system prevailing in Germany, and that the type best represented by the second method is the system prevailing in England. In reaching a conclusion as to the relative merits of these two systems, the commission follow both in part and neither in its entirety. They follow the German method far enough to make the remedy here provided exclusive; they follow the English method far enough to provide a compensation act, but not far enough to continue upon the statute books laws as to negligence under the common-law system and under the employers' liability act in force in England.

Among the reasons why the commission reject the German system are, first, that in Germany for the first 13 weeks of injury a sickness fund is provided, contributed to by employers and employees, but it is supposed that would not be available in this country because our population is considered to be not so stable; the people move about. It seems to me that that objection is to a mere detail. If it be a fact that our people can not be so easily identified, there is nothing fundamental in having, first, a sickness benefit, and then, afterwards, compensation.

It is stated immediately following that in the report of the commission, by way of an objection under the first heading, that this bill deals only with one industry while the German system deals with a great many industries, especially those where hazard may be involved. Well, Mr. President, there was nothing either in the joint resolution or in the authority vested in the commission to limit it in applying this remedy to only one industry. Other industries besides those connected with the transportation of interstate commerce by railroad are dangerous; in fact, it is stated that more dangerous employments are, for instance, mining, carpentering, the steel industry, and even farming, and as this legislation is intended to be a model in the enactment of similar legislation by the States and is intended to cure a defect in our system of administering the relationship between master and servant, if all industrial classes engaged in hazardous employments could have been brought in the benefit would be that much greater.

Another reason for not adopting a system similar to that in Germany is that we have not the data upon which to base legislation. On page 277 of volume 2 of the hearings before the commission, in the brief of Mr. Dawson, are gathered the employments and the insurance of the employers, running from the year 1886 until 1908, and I ask permission to incorporate in my remarks that part of the table covering the years 1902 to 1908.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Maine in the chair). Without objection, the request will be granted.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not insert the whole table, because it is quite lengthy, and the portion I have asked to have inserted will give the idea. In this table employments shown to be more dangerous than railroading, as far as insurance liability could show or tend to show that fact, are agricultural machinery work, beer bottling and shipping concerns, carpentering, flour mills, furniture factories, powder factories, sawmills, and shipbuilding plants.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. BRYAN. There is rather an interesting statement, selected from statistics, on page 669 of the report of the commission, which is most surprising to everyone, I imagine, who has not given this subject considerable study. There it is said:

During the past 10 years we have had two wars, the Spanish and the Philippine, and the aggregate loss of killed and wounded in the two was less than 6,000 men, while the number killed and wounded in our industrial army during the same period, according to lowest estimates, was more than 5,000,000; that is, for every man killed or wounded in war "victories of peace" have cost us 875 men killed and wounded.

The six bloodiest battles of the Civil War were Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, Wilderness, Antietam, Chancellorsville, and Chickamauga. The total number of killed, wounded, and missing in these six battles aggregated less than 105,000 men, while the number killed and injured upon our railways during the year ending June 30, 1906, was 108,324. (Tolman.)

Mr. President, if a system could be devised which would take within its scope these other classes in dangerous employments, I believe that everybody would admit that it would be that much more desirable. The data furnished here, together with the information gathered in this country, it seems to me, ought to furnish enough information as that we ought not to say that we are incapable, from lack of information, of dealing with this subject. I ask permission to incorporate in my remarks, without reading, two tables found on page 284 of the Statistical Abstract for the year 1910.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Mr. BRYAN. The only other objections to this system of including all corporations or businesses engaged in hazardous enterprises are the trouble and expense. It is said that it would take an enormous number of men to handle it, and it would cost much money. Mr. President, we have the corporation tax. It takes as many men to handle it now, separated, as it would if they were consolidated. And there is this further inducement, aside from the almost universal benefit of such a statute, that the commission, in enumerating their objections to this system in force in Germany, have not raised the question of the constitutionality of such an act. It seems to me obvious that if by this method of corporation tax you could collect the funds there would be much less danger of litigation than in taking a single industry and treating only a portion of that, and thus leaving present in every accident the question of whether the employee, at the time of injury, was engaged in intrastate or interstate commerce.

One of the strongest pleas before the commission—I have no doubt one of the strongest inducements to recommend this legislation—was the belief that it would lessen litigation. If the plan accepted will do that, Mr. President, the plan rejected would carry that much-desired end much further. While the commission, in stating its objections to the system I have been describing, did not base any upon the ground that such an act would be unconstitutional, and they contend that this act is constitutional, and I am not disposed to dispute that, Mr. President—I would hesitate to do it, to set my judgment up against that of able lawyers who have given years of study to this subject, appearing before the commission—but we must admit that a reading of this record will disclose that a large per cent of the lawyers appearing before the commission did not believe that the legislation in the form in which it comes to us would be constitutional. Some of them, in order to make it constitutional, wanted to give to the employee a right of election in theory and deny it to him as a matter of fact.

I think it would not be far wrong to say that the most controlling reason for the reporting of this bill is that it is supposed that both the railroad employers and the railroad employees favor it. The reasons suggested in the report are that it would lessen litigation, and would relieve the unfortunate wrangles that from time to time exist between capital and labor. I submit, Mr. President, that the real reason that employers favor this legislation is because it will lessen the amount of money they will have to pay, and that the real reason the laboring men favor it is because they believe they will get more benefit under it than they can get under existing legislation. That is human nature. That has been the course pursued by both heretofore.

Another reason, or perhaps a corollary to the reasons already stated, that would induce the companies to favor this legislation is this fact: Liability is now based upon negligence. If the company comes to the Interstate Commerce Commission and says, "I want to include within my necessary expenses the amount I have paid out on account of injuries," the Interstate Commerce Commission will say, "That should not be charged to the traffic and borne by the public, because it was due to your negligence, and should be taken from the earnings of the stockholders." So, at the suggestion of Mr. Thom, the attorney for the Southern Railway, who drafted that part of the bill, section 31 was incorporated.

Finally, the committee struck it out. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] stated in debate the other day that at the proper time he would move to put that back in the bill, but to give it the contrary effect; that is to say, he would introduce an amendment to say that you shall not charge that up to the traffic. Mr. President, it seems to me that if we do that we will be rendering it quite likely that this bill will be held unconstitutional upon that sole ground, because you can not, upon the one hand, say, "We will place a burden upon the traffic, notwithstanding you are not to blame for it," and on the other hand say, "We will not allow you to charge that up to the traffic, and therefore, finally, take it out of the ultimate consumer."

The railroads favor this legislation because it will get them away from the employer's liability act. I ask permission to incorporate at this point a copy of the employer's liability act of 1908, and the amendment of it adopted in 1910.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request is granted.

The acts referred to are as follows:

[Public—No. 100.]

An act (H. R. 20310) relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several States or Territories, or between any of the States and Territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the States or Territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the States or Territories and any foreign nation or nations, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee; and, if none, then of such employee's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

SEC. 2. That every common carrier by railroad in the Territories, the District of Columbia, the Panama Canal Zone, or other possessions of the United States shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in any of said jurisdictions, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee; and, if none, then of such employee's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

SEC. 3. That in all actions hereafter brought against any such common carrier by railroad under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee: Provided, That no such employee who may be injured or killed shall be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee.

SEC. 4. That in any action brought against any common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for injuries to, or the death of, any of its employees, such employee shall not be held to have assumed the risks of his employment in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee.

SEC. 5. That any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void: Provided, That in any action brought against any such common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, such common carrier may set off therein any sum it has contributed or paid to any insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employee or the person entitled thereto on account of the injury or death for which said action was brought.

SEC. 6. That no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.

SEC. 7. That the term "common carrier" as used in this act shall include the receiver or receivers or other persons or corporations charged with the duty of the management and operation of the business of a common carrier.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be held to limit the duty or liability of common carriers or to impair the rights of their employees under any other act or acts of Congress, or to affect the prosecution of any pending proceeding or right of action under the act of Congress entitled "An act relating to liability of common carriers in the District of Columbia and Territories, and to common carriers engaged in commerce between the States and between the States and foreign nations to their employees," approved June 11, 1906.

Approved, April 22, 1908.

[Public—No. 117.]

An act (H. R. 17263) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases," approved April 22, 1908.

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases," approved April 22, 1908, be amended in section 6 so that said section shall read:

"SEC. 6. That no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.

"Under this act an action may be brought in a circuit court of the United States, in the district of the residence of the defendant, or in which the cause of action arose, or in which the defendant shall be doing business at the time of commencing such action. The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States under this act shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several States, and no case arising under this act and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States."

SEC. 2. That said act be further amended by adding the following section as section 9 of said act:

"SEC. 9. That any right of action given by this act to a person suffering injury shall survive to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee, and, if none, then of such employee's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee; but in such cases there shall be only one recovery for the same injury."

Approved, April 5, 1910.

Mr. BRYAN. Is it not remarkable that having heretofore followed the opposite course, having heretofore opposed legislation that relaxed in some degree the rigors of the common law as to liability, having fought in States legislation based upon comparative negligence, having fought the employers' liability act of 1906 through the Supreme Court of the United States, having fought the amended act of 1908 through the Supreme Court of the United States where it was upheld January 15, 1912, these gentlemen should suddenly reverse the policy that has hitherto been pursued and all at once come in in a spirit of generosity to their workmen and say, "We want all of you to have compensation," when heretofore they have been trying to keep any of them from receiving damages for injuries suffered?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know that it makes any great difference one way or the other, but I suppose the Senator wants to state the fact about it. The Senator says that the railroads favored this legislation. The fact is that the railroads opposed the adoption of the original resolution, which provided for the appointment of this commission.

Mr. BRYAN. That was before the act was upheld.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They opposed the resolution which provided for the appointment of this commission to inquire into the subject at all. The fact is that many of the railroad employers' representatives who appeared before this commission, a large proportion of them, objected very strenuously to this legislation. If the Senator has read the hearings he will have seen that, for example, Mr. Lathrop, of the great Santa Fe system, opposed it; that Mr. Warfield, of the Louisville & Nashville, opposed it; and Mr. Cary and some others.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will permit me, my recollection is, although I may be mistaken, that those gentlemen opposed the bill as drawn, insisting that there ought to be an election in theory but none in practical effect.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator will see that there were several stages of the hearings. Before the bill was drafted at all these gentlemen appeared before us. Some of them were in favor of the general scheme and some of them, as I have stated, were not. When the commission had announced that it had reached the conclusion that it had the power and that it proposed to report to Congress a compensation law, then the gentlemen who had opposed this scheme made a virtue of necessity and bent their efforts to cut down the amount of compensation which should be allowed.

Mr. BRYAN. Then, I understand the Senator to say that most of the railroad companies, so far as he knows, are not in favor of this measure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not say that. I say that some of them came before our commission and opposed it, and some of them appeared and favored the general scheme.

Mr. BRYAN. But, taken as a whole, what would the Senator from Utah say was the attitude of the companies?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would say that perhaps the majority of the railroad companies to-day favor this sort of legislation. I think that a very large proportion of them are opposed to the bill in its present form. They think that the compensation afforded is too high.

If the Senator will permit me still further, I will say that the attitude of a great majority of employers of labor all over the country, and of the employees as well, has been favorable. There have been no less than 10 State commissions at work during the last four or five years, and in each one of those commissions there has been represented the employers through some representative men and the workmen through some of their representative labor men, and they have investigated the subject together, and employers and employees alike have indorsed this general plan of compensation, differing as to detail.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I knew that Mr. Warfield seemed to be opposed to this bill. My recollection was that he wanted to include within it a provision giving an election which could not be worked out in effect, giving the right of trial by jury to injured employees, but circumscribing it so that the injured employee could not be reasonably expected to go into court. The reason why the railroad companies should favor it was not stated by any of them in as terse and concise form as it was stated by the Senator from Utah, the chairman of the commission. While some of the provisions were being objected to, the chairman, on page 1191, said:

> It seems to me, with reference to personal-injury legislation, that we have practically reached a parting of the ways. Nearly everybody who thinks very much about the subject is convinced that the existing liability law is both unwise and unfair, and that it ought to be altered. Now, legislation, as it seems to me, is bound to take one of two courses; either the direction that this takes, of getting rid of the existing liability system altogether and put in place of it a compensation law, or of getting rid of the objectionable features, or the features which people consider objectionable, in the existing liability law.
> If the character of legislation now under consideration is not adopted by the Federal Government and by the various States, then legislation is going to take the direction of taking away from the railroads the various defenses which they now have. I venture to say that if legislation of this kind is not adopted, within 10 years in practically every State of the Union the doctrines of assumption of risk and contributory negligence and the fellow-servant doctrine will be practically wiped out, and you will be put upon the single proposition of negligence—negligence of the employer. If that is done, your operations under that condition will certainly be more expensive than under a law of this kind, even though this law may provide rates of compensation which will cost you a little more than you are paying now. In other words, while this law may now cost you something more than you are paying under the existing condition of affairs, it will cost you far less in 10 years than if legislation takes the other direction.

I think that is unanswerable, and I believe that is the reason it was based on.

But it is said, Mr. President, that the employees also favor this legislation, and the record has been burdened with telegrams and communications to that effect. It does seem remarkable, when the Government never undertook in all its history until six years ago to deal with this business, immediately after the litigation has been had and the legislation upheld, that we should be asked to abandon that and start all over again. It is too soon to realize the benefit that will be derived under the employers' liability act. A few States have legislation practically like it now. I judge that men are governed by their interests very largely and that where this bill is opposed the States have comparative-negligence statutes and statutes abolishing the fellow-servants' doctrine and establishing also comparative recovery even where there exists contributory negligence. Why, then, should the employees prefer the pending bill over the present legislation? It is because they believe there will not be litigation under it. They think that under this bill we will have arrived at a point where they can go down to the office and settle their case just as they can go and buy a suit of clothes; that the money will be there waiting for them. Running all through this record is the idea that if we can save the cost of litigation and the attorneys' fees we ought to favor it, and it is the idea that not so much of their recovery will be taken up in the payment of court costs and attorneys' fees.

But, Mr. President, if we look at the statistics gathered by the commission, we will find that that has not been the experience in other countries. Even under the broad provisions of the German system, after it has been in existence for nearly 30 years, $24\frac{7}{10}$ per cent of the cases are now litigated. Again, if anyone believes that under the English law there will not be litigation under a compensation act, let him turn to page 570 of the hearings of the commission.

Is it a fact that by the passage of this legislation we make it sure to such an extent that there will not be litigation? Let us see what an attorney who filed a brief before the commission, who advocated this bill or a similar measure, said:

> Under such a law the right to trial by jury of all issues of fact would be preserved. The principal question of fact arising under that law would be:
> 1. Whether or not the injured person was in defendant's employ.
> 2. Whether or not he was of a class of employers to whom the law applied.
> 3. Whether or not the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment.
> 4. Whether or not the injury was due to an excepted cause.
> 5. Whether or not the injuries claimed for resulted from the accident or from an accident.
> 6. The amount of compensation.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. While the law, no doubt, would not entirely stop litigation in cases arising by reason of accident, does not the Senator think it would reduce litigation?

Mr. BRYAN. To be perfectly frank with the Senator, I think it would reduce litigation this far: Under the employers' liability act, as it now is, anybody can recover unless the injury was due to his sole negligence. Under this legislation everybody, presumably, could recover, subject to the great question of whether he is engaged in interstate commerce or State commerce. That question will always be present in every case arising under this act.

Mr. BROWN. But in cases that are litigated now the defense always rests, as a rule, on the question of negligence.

Mr. BRYAN. Under the employers' liability act?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; under the present act.

Mr. BRYAN. No; a man may be guilty of contributory negligence. That does not bar him from recovery. It goes to the jury, and the jury is to say how much his contributory negligence contributed to the accident.

Mr. BROWN. Exactly. So it leaves the question of negligence, the amount of contribution on the part of the person who is injured, always a question to be litigated and decided. Now, the value of this act, it seems to me, is that it takes that question out of litigation.

Mr. BRYAN. The question of liability?

Mr. BROWN. No; not the question of liability, but the question of how much a man contributed to his own negligence, of course provided he did not willfully invite the injury. So that question is eliminated.

Mr. BRYAN. That is true.

Mr. BROWN. And that being true, the question is relied upon as a defense in these damage suits. In my observation and experience it would certainly amount to a reduction of litigation.

Mr. BRYAN. Does not the Senator think that the question of amount is responsible for as much litigation as the question of negligence?

Mr. BROWN. Of course, the amount is always an issue when the parties do not come together, but the fact that a man stands a chance to get nothing in a majority of these litigated cases keeps many of them out of court unless they can find a lawyer who will take it on a contingent fee; and many a man goes unrequited and uncompensated for an injury sustained owing to the very fear that he will not be able to recover anything.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Nebraska, it seems to me, overlooks the fact that all the old common-law defenses have been wiped out by the present law of Congress; that the question to be determined now is simply whether the negligence of the company in any manner contributed to the injury. If it did, then there can be a recovery. Now, it is true, as the Senator says, that if there has been contributory negligence that fact must be taken into consideration by the jury in fixing the amount of damages to be paid. But will the Senator contend that that makes the trial any longer or postpones it a day further? It simply puts upon the jury the question of taking that one matter into consideration, so that——

Mr. BRYAN. And the same witnesses who testify to injury testify, generally, as to the question of liability.

Mr. REED. Yes. I want to say further, if the Senator will pardon me, that will scarcely be said to inject even a new proposition into the trial of one of these cases. It will be a new proposition in the fact that the court will instruct the jury to take it into consideration; but, as a matter of fact, courts or juries have always taken those facts into consideration. Any man who has ever tried any of these cases, or observed their trial, knows that where a railroad has been grossly negligent or criminally negligent and there is no justification, courts always, or juries almost invariably, award higher damages than they do when the accident was one for which the road, while liable, was not culpable to so great an extent.

I think those considerations take away the argument that it makes more litigation. On the contrary, the certainty of recovery under the Federal act as it now stands, the fact that all these common-law defenses have been wiped out, will very strongly make for the settlement of cases out of court. A larger proportion of passenger cases have always been settled than those of employees, because the same defenses do not exist; and in conversation with men who have studied this question, I have been told that it is a fact that since the enactment of the Federal liability law there has been a greater proportion of settlements than heretofore. Of course, it necessarily tends to reduce litigation.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I was directing the Senator's attention to the point that he makes that the bill now pending, if it becomes a law, will not, in his judgment, reduce litigation. I took it for granted that the contrary was true. I was led largely to that conclusion by the fact that all the people who write to me with reference to this legislation and oppose it are men who are interested in bringing these damage suits and are men whose living depends on the recovery of judgments in court. When the attorney who makes that class of cases a specialty complains, it seems to me as though he were of the opinion that this proposed law would have a tendency to reduce his business.

Mr. BRYAN. The only complaint I have had, Mr. President, has been from a few of the railroad workmen. I do not undertake to say whether or not they represent a majority. I had a letter and a telegram from an engineer whom I know, stating that he would be at the conference to be held early in May and requesting that no action be taken until the conference could consider the matter thoroughly. I have not heard from any members of the bar with reference to the matter at all. I take it that it is true that the great majority of the laboring men favor this legislation. I believe it is because they are misled into the belief that under it there will be practically no litigation, even though the damages they recover will be less than under present conditions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Has the Senator read the reports of the English experience with reference to this subject of litigation?

Mr. BRYAN. As incorporated in this document, does the Senator mean?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not remember.

Mr. BRYAN. I think it is incorporated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the recent reports, which I intend to call attention to before this debate ends, show that the English experience is that from 90 to 95 per cent of all the cases are settled without going into court.

Mr. BRYAN. Can the Senator tell me—for he is much better informed than I am—what percentage of such cases are settled in this country without litigation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What percentage of personal-injury cases are so settled?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I can not, because I think there are no statistics upon that precise question; but the statistics thus far gathered show that approximately 52 per cent of all the accidents that occur to employees in the course of their employment are inherent risks of the industry and do not result from anybody's negligence.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would not undertake to say that 52 per cent would be settled——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. While I do not undertake to dispute statistics, I sometimes doubt their accuracy. I know it has been said that statistics never lie, but I remember it has also been said that in the hands of an expert they can be made to become "powerfully equivocacious."

Mr. REED. I just want to understand the Senator from Utah. Does the Senator from Utah mean to say that 52 per cent of the cases are defeated now because they are cases resulting from risks inherent to the business?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. I had particular reference to the report made by the Wisconsin commission, which I read the other day, which showed that they had made a thorough investigation of this whole subject in the State of Wisconsin. Their report was that 52 per cent of the accidents, fatal and nonfatal, resulted from the hazard of the industry, and were not due to any negligence either of the employee or the employer or the fellow servant, or all combined.

Mr. REED. Nor to the violation of any State or Federal statute with reference to safety appliances?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; nor to any such violation; but to the pure hazard of the industry. The German experience, where they have gathered their statistics with very great care, covering hundreds of thousands of cases and covering a period of 20 years, to which I referred the other day, shows that it has scarcely varied from 44 per cent for a period of 20 years.

Mr. BRYAN. Then how does the Senator account for the fact that the percentage of litigation has not decreased in Germany?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not familiar with the figures to which the Senator calls attention. I know that under the German system they have a variety of ways of dealing with these questions. They do not necessarily go to court, but they have boards which investigate them, and whether or not the statistics include the investigation of the boards I do not know. I can not speak of that, because I am not at this moment familiar with the matter to which the Senator calls attention. I am speaking of the English experience, where they have the system of direct boards, as we provide in this bill, and their experience is that from 90 to 95 per cent of cases are settled without litigation.

Mr. BRYAN. This was called to the attention of the commission by Mr. Carter, and he quoted from Mr. Schwedtman and somebody else, who stated that it was one of the discouraging features connected with the German system that there was yet, after this law had been in effect for 29 years, I believe, 24.7 per cent of the cases that were carried before these boards that were litigated and appealed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As the Senator himself stated, and as the Senator very well knows, there is no litigation under the German law in the sense that we have litigation under our laws.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The payments are made out of the fund.

Mr. BRYAN. The amounts proposed are contested; I do not know whether in court or not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The payments are made out of the fund. An application is made to the board to pay, and the board must investigate. I take it that is what is meant. There is no suit by the employee against the employer.

Mr. BRYAN. I will put in the statistics that refer to that matter when I find them here.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. BROWN. In the controversies the Senator speaks of in Germany, under the law are the complainants, the injured parties, represented by counsel?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, I suppose so; they can be represented or need not be.

Mr. BROWN. It was stated by the Senator from Utah that the litigation was not the same in character as ours. I ask whether the Government provided a board whose duty it was to investigate such cases, or whether the injured person was dependent, as he is under existing law in this country, to hire a lawyer for himself?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know whether they have got rid of the lawyer in Germany. I think it will be a long time before we will in this country, and, for one, I am not on the affirmative side of that question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The fact is that in Germany the law is administered by a board of employers upon which the employee is not represented. I think it is one of the unfortunate things of the German law that the administration of this accident compensation scheme is in the hands of a board of employers.

Mr. BRYAN. And that the employee has no legal representation upon it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And that the employee has no representative upon the board. Of course, in the last analysis he can go to the courts, but in the first instance the question is determined by this board of employers.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the question that will always be present will be, Did the accident occur in the course of interstate commerce? The authorities on this question already are in much confusion. Mr. Dawson submitted a brief, which he said it had taken him two or three years to prepare, in which he says there is a great uncertainty at the present time as to whether employees engaged in repairing cars are included. The chairman of the commission said, on page 1052:

> Now, whether he is engaged in interstate commerce is a fact for the courts to determine in the given case.

Of course that is so, but he is of the opinion that the employer must be a railroad company. Of course the employee must be engaged in interstate commerce, and in a case in Texas a brakeman on a train carrying interstate shipments was held not to be engaged in interstate commerce because he was injured while placing a car having in it only intrastate shipments between points in Texas.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have that same uncertainty under the employers' liability law, of course.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not say that you will not have litigation under the employers' liability act, but I am trying now to show that you will have it under this bill if enacted into law.

Mr. REED and Mr. SUTHERLAND addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRYAN. Just a moment, until I get through with this point, and then I will yield. Now, how can an injured man know whether or not he is engaged in interstate commerce? It has been claimed that this act will be so plain that the employee need not have a lawyer to represent him, but that he will be perfectly safe in having an agent to meet in litigation the trained and highly paid counsel of the railroad company, who makes a specialty of injury cases.

Different courts have held different ways on this question of interstate shipments. For instance, a Pennsylvania district court has held that a workman engaged in repairing a bridge is not within the provisions of the Federal liability act. Another district court has come to exactly the contrary conclusion. A judge in the eastern district of Washington has held that a brakeman engaged in repairing a brake was engaged in repairing cars, and another judge in the eastern district of Washington held that a workman employed in the shops engaged in repairing interstate cars was within the provisions of the act.

Will express companies and sleeping-car companies be within the provisions of this act? Are they not engaged in interstate commerce by railroad? Yet neither an express messenger nor a Pullman conductor has any more to do with the operation of the train than a passenger has. Some lawyers before the commission stated that they would be included, while others stated they would not be. Some who had given the subject much study went so far as to say that perhaps the telegraph and telephone companies would be included. Now, is it possible that we have reached that stage of perfection in legislation that a layman can go into court and enforce his rights where these complicated questions will always be present?

This bill is different in that respect from the present law in that added to the words fixing liability in the employers' liability act are these words:

> Arising out of and in the course of his employment.

There have been many decisions, and conflicting decisions, in England in administering that clause. Is it to be expected that anybody will believe that an ordinary workman employed on a railroad train can settle such a question without the assistance of counsel?

It is urged that the law be made exclusive. It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is nothing but just and fair to allow a man who, without negligence on his part, is injured to recover more than one who contributed to the injury; and it seems that it would be just and fair to carry that one step further and to say that a man who contributed to his injury should recover more than the man who was the sole cause of the accident.

In the second place, it is supposed that if the law be merely elective an increase in the number of courts will be necessary. It is a little difficult to reconcile the statement that litigation will be much less if the law be made exclusive with the provision in the bill for the appointment of one or more adjusters for each district court in the United States.

The courts as at present established have been able to keep up with the litigation even before the employers' liability act became perfected, and ought to be more able to do so now when the rights of the men have been established and when the only case in which they can not recover is when their sole negligence caused the injury. They can recover even then if the employer violated a statute of Congress.

Mr. REED. Or of a State.

Mr. BRYAN. Or, perhaps, of a State also. Again, it is said that to retain both methods would mean that the railroad companies would have to keep up their investigations into accidents. Well, they ought to keep them up. Without an investigation they can not determine what caused an accident and can not be prepared to prevent like accidents in the future. Again, they will have to keep them up because not all employees are engaged in interstate commerce, and because they will still have passengers on their trains, and because, again, others, neither employees nor passengers, are sometimes injured. More people walking on the railroad tracks are killed every year than are employees.

It seems to me that the fundamental objection to this bill is this: It is drawn upon the theory that, inasmuch as this business is conducted for the benefit of the public, the public as a whole ought to bear the expense. I am inclined to believe that that is a good theory, but my objection is that you take a small class that can ill afford it and place the whole burden upon them and not upon the public as a whole. Why should an engineer observing every rule of his company, guilty of not the slightest negligence, be denied compensation for the damages he has suffered because the company has been negligent and have something taken out of his poor earnings to pay for a number of others who could not recover under the existing statute?

If he be killed and leave a daughter 15 years of age, she could recover for one year; and at 16, by no fault of hers, by no fault of her father, who was killed by the negligence of some one else, she would be turned out to earn her own way in the world, unless she happened to be either an idiot or a cripple.

We hear much in this day about "the greatest good to the greatest number." I have not any doubt that if all the employees were gotten together, the greatest number would say: "Well, let us divide up among all of us any damages collected by the few of us." I suppose, perhaps, they would agree to that before they were injured. One of the purposes of the establishment of courts and one reason that will maintain them in spite of all the attacks that can be made upon them is, that the minority have rights, that the humblest man shall be equal to the most powerful corporation in the courts of the land. Of course, everybody would like to see capital and labor get along harmoniously. I doubt if you can accomplish that by legislation. Here will be one of the temptations to the employer under this bill: By so much as he reduces the wages of his employees, by that much will he reduce his liability in case of injury or death. If 10 per cent reduction is made in his wages, 10 per cent of the amount recoverable under this bill will be taken from him or his beneficiaries. That is bound to be true.

There is another proposition submitted by Mr. Carter, who represented the firemen and enginemen who opposed this bill, but who, I understand, now remain neutral. I do not know whether or not it is well based as an economic fact, but he makes the statement that if you provide that the employers shall be made to pay in all events, and that the burden will be charged upon the public, the employees will be less careful, and he illustrates that by saying that a man is more careful of his property without fire insurance than if he has it, and he illustrates it again by recounting this incident:

> While passing through a small manufacturing plant recently I noted a rapidly revolving pulley operated by a belt connected with a shaft in the basement. Between this revolving pulley and another near-by machine girls were required to pass, their skirts actually touching the moving parts. I said to the proprietor, with whom I am well acquainted and who is as kindly a man as one usually meets, "Is not that a dangerous pulley?" He replied, "No; I guess not; the insurance inspector has not kicked." This simply meant that if one of the girls were killed or maimed, he, the employer, would be protected from a damage suit by the insurance company.

Then he says—and he claims to have studied the subject:

> Under all workmen's compensation schemes of which I have read, the employer is presumed to protect himself from individual loss and responsibility of deaths and injuries of his employees by insurance in one form or another, and he recoups himself for the expense of this insurance by increasing the price of his product to the consumer.

* * * * * * *

Practically all investigators of the European situation in compiling or quoting accident statistics agree that the rate of such accidents have increased since the adoption of workmen's compensation scheme. Some attach all blame to the employee; none find the employer responsible for this unwelcome feature. Some explain the matter in one way and some in another. Messrs. Schwedtman and Emery, the gentlemen who conducted the investigation for the National Association of Manufacturers (already referred to herein), report Germany's experience as follows.

The record of new accident cases, lasting more than 13 weeks, during the 25-year period gives this result:

	New cases.

Continuing, Mr. Carter said:

These gentlemen are not among those who assert that workmen's compensation acts have materially reduced the accident rate, and say:

"One would draw the natural inference from such a statement that 5 or 10 years' systematic accident prevention will reduce the number of injuries 50, or, at least, 25 per cent. There is no such favorable record in Germany after 25 years of persistent effort."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator does not contend, does he, that because an employee is certain to recover compensation in case of accident, he will become more careless than he would be without the law that would give him compensation?

Mr. BRYAN. That the employee would?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; the employee.

Mr. BRYAN. I am speaking of the employer.

Mr. BROWN. I am speaking now of the employee.

Mr. BRYAN. It might have a result the other way. I am not so sure about that, although there is this difference——

Mr. BROWN. Is it conceivable that a man will become careless and invite an accident to himself simply because there is compensation provided for him in case he is hurt?

Mr. BRYAN. No; that is a reason that does not apply on the other side.

Mr. BROWN. But that applies, I think, on the side I am taking, the employee's side, and I understood the Senator to say that he thought it might have that effect.

Mr. BRYAN. It might, in some instances, although, on the whole, I think it would not have that effect, because men value their lives more than money.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, does not the Senator from Nebraska recognize that if an employee knew that under the law he could not recover anything if he was careless and caused the accident, while he might not invite injury, he would be less careful to avoid it than if he knew that even if it had been brought on by his own carelessness he could still recover?

Mr. BROWN. Oh, no, Mr. President. I disagree on that proposition entirely. That is the most unreasonable and revolting doctrine that I ever heard advanced—that a sane man will become careless and thereby invite an accident to himself because he can receive some compensation for it after he is hurt. I submit that our human experience disproves that proposition entirely and absolutely. You might just as well argue that because a man carries a life-insurance policy he would not be so afraid of death. The principle is the same.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Or an accident policy.

Mr. BROWN. The principle is absolutely the same.

Mr. BRYAN. I agree with the Senator, after that very lucid statement.

Mr. BROWN. I am glad that I have convinced the Senator on one proposition.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator quoted figures showing that the number of accidents in Germany had increased during the period of 25 years. It is true that the number of accidents has increased, but——

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, I understand, if the Senator will pardon me, that perhaps the number of employees has increased in like proportion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Precisely; but let me suggest still further to the Senator that the German experience shows that the percentage of accidents due to the fault of the employer in the last 20 years has decreased from 20 per cent to 16 per cent. I read those figures the other day.

Mr. BROWN. Yes; and the number of appeals has decreased from about 80 per cent to about 24 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator means by appeals, trials?

Mr. BRYAN. Not necessarily trials; appeals from the arbitration board.

Mr. BROWN. That may be true, because appeals have become easier.

Mr. BRYAN. That advantage will not be present under this bill.

Mr. BROWN. Just as under existing law a case is tried and if the employee who has been injured loses or recovers what, in his judgment, is an inadequate amount an appeal is very rarely taken by the employee, first, because of the expense, and, second, because of the inevitable delay, which amounts to a denial of justice in nine cases out of ten in these damage cases when they are appealed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, just a moment. I would really rather listen to other Senators speak than speak myself. I have been on my feet some time. I am perfectly willing to answer questions, but inasmuch as all these Senators intend to speak anyway, they might take it out of their own time. I only make that suggestion because I am not very well, and I have been on my feet a considerable length of time.

Much has been said about the ambulance-chasing lawyer. He has no friends either among the laymen or the lawyers, and he ought not to have. But if such lawyers have received too much in the past, why not amend the existing laws as to the amount of compensation that can be paid an attorney? Instead of that, Mr. President, with all of the many intricate legal questions that will be present under this bill, some of the best lawyers in the country doubting its constitutionality, with the great court of appeals of New York holding an act similar to be unconstitutional because it denies equal protection of the laws, is it to be supposed that a mere agent, a layman, can cope with the best legal talent that these great corporations can hire? Is this bill itself so simple as all that? Why, over the question of whether an employee suffering from a total disability could be made to suffer a reduction or whether that applied solely to one suffering from a partial disability there is disagreement between able lawyers here in the Senate. But there is one provision in the bill that meets my hearty approval, if this litigation is to be carried on on the part of the plaintiff by agents. Section 7, while providing for written notice within 30 days, provides that an extension may be had under certain circumstances for 90 days upon proof of ignorance of the law or facts. I suppose that a man injured would be cognizant of that fact, but undoubtedly it is a wise provision not to hold the claimant responsible for the ignorance of the law of his agents.

But the claim agent is to be permitted to flourish in all his glory. By persuasion and promises of settlement he may be able to prevent an employee from giving the notice within 30 days; and the employee may hesitate to give notice, fearful that it may cause him to lose his job.

And again, Mr. President, not all accidents develop the full extent of injury within 90 days. One of the most pitiable cases came before the Committee on Claims on yesterday—and I merely cite it as an instance—that of a Government employee who was walking down in a basement and stumbled over a trapdoor which was perhaps an inch above the level of the floor. He supposed that he had only broken his arm. He gave up his employment and went back to Ohio, where he lived; was in the clerk's office there and afterwards in the insurance business; then married, and four years later it developed, by the statement of physicians and surgeons, beyond question that that injury, slight at the beginning, was the cause of a permanent disability; and yet under this bill an employee must give the notice within 30 days, or at the most within 90 days, and must bring his action within six months, determine whether he is an interstate employee or an intrastate employee, determine whether his employer was at the moment engaged in interstate or intrastate business; and if he fails, whatever merits his case may have, he will never be able to obtain any recovery for the damage done to him and his family.

Mr. President, the State courts can administer the present law. In your various counts in your declaration you can charge that the employer was engaged in intrastate business and interstate business; but under this bill you can not go into any State court in the land. His only possibility of recovery is in the Federal court, and how it is possible for him to solve that question without the advice of a lawyer, and a good lawyer, it is impossible for me to conceive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will suspend for a moment. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Caroline asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Florida will proceed.

Mr. BRYAN. An additional reason for allowing men entitled to claim under this act to go into State courts is this: We have county courts, county judges' courts, and circuit courts just as able and more able to understand this act and to understand the legislation of their States than an adjuster, and it is just that in the county where the man lives the remedy and the relief to which he is entitled should be given.

I do not know how it may be in other States, but in my State a man might have to travel 500 miles to go to the place where this adjuster lives. He would have to gather up his witnesses, tender them in advance their mileage and their witness fees, get his money for the physician who can testify as to the accident or the injury, and proceed four or five hundred miles to see this adjuster. He presents his testimony and goes back home. Finding it not satisfactory to him, then he can file exceptions and get into the district court of the United States, pay the costs incurred before the adjuster, and again gather up his witnesses and his physician and tender to them pay and pay the mileage to which they are entitled and the per diem to get into court, there to be confronted with the finding of this adjuster made prima facie evidence against him.

If nothing else be done with this bill, Mr. President, I submit that that is too much hardship, too much injustice, too much cruelty to impose upon the ordinary man working for a railroad.

Mr. President, I shall not trespass upon the patience of the Senate to consider this bill in its details. In passing, however, I desire to call attention to one or two matters. I wish Senators to consider carefully the provisions relating to payments for dependents, as included in section 23—that is, where an employee is injured and there is a total disability and he afterwards dies. The method of computation there is, in effect, this: You estimate the total amount the dependent would have received for eight years. From that you deduct two items; first, the amount the employee himself had received before death, which is just, and then again the amount which the dependent would have received between the period of the accident and the death, if death had immediately resulted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no.

Mr. BRYAN. I will read it.

> Second. By deducting from such amount a sum equal to the payments for the period between the accident and the death, which, if the accident had immediately resulted in death, the employer, by reason of the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in clause (A) of section 21, would have been relieved from making.

So that if he lived four years and were entitled to $50 a month and then died, he would have received half of what his dependents would have received in the eight years. From that you take the amount that would have been paid to his dependents, so that it works out that at the end of four years the dependents receive nothing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to interrupt the Senator, because I am sure that he does not want to make a misstatement about the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I certainly do not. I have studied it as carefully as I could. I hope I am mistaken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator is mistaken about that. The provision is that there should be deducted "from such amount a sum equal to the payments for the period between the accident and the death." That is, the amount paid to the employee.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no; not paid to the employee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (reading):

> By deducting from such amount a sum equal to the payments for the period between the accident and the death.

Mr. BRYAN. Not the payment, but "a sum equal to the payments."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; a sum equal to the payments.

Mr. BRYAN. So the employer would have been relieved from making it if death had immediately resulted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the period between the accident and death. That is, you deduct a sum equal to those. You can not deduct the payments, because they were already made.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the Senator will see it is "by deducting from such amount a sum equal to the payments for the period between the accident and the death" to which the dependent would not have been entitled if death had been immediate. Then you add to that the amount you have paid the employee and subtract both of them from the total amount.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. First of all we deduct from the amount which would have been paid in the eight years the amount which has been paid to the employee. That is the first deduction. Then we deduct the amount of the payments for the period between the accident and the death, which, if the accident had immediately resulted in death, the employer, by reason of the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in clause A of section 21 would pay. The clause by reason of the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in clause A is a limitation upon the first part of the section, and it means a contingency such as the death of a child, for example, or the death of the widow.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator state what it means except that it is a sum equal to the amount that would have been paid?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; the language——

Mr. BRYAN. If a man had died, you pay to the widow or children dependent during that period.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Georgia I think unwittingly fell into exactly the same difficulty and made the same statement.

Mr. BRYAN. When I heard him make the statement I thought the provision would not have been there, but I have given careful consideration to the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is absolutely no such intention in the bill. If the language is susceptible of any such construction, of course it ought to be made plain, because there was no such intention. I do not think it means that. I think it clear that it does not mean that. The language was drafted with some care.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, it makes no difference what this convention about to meet in May might consider with reference to this bill, because I believe that I understand its provisions. I would be willing to vote against it, notwithstanding their judgment favored it, and trust to its administration to justify my course.

There are others here supporting this legislation without complete and full investigation, because Senators have not time to consider every bill, believing that they are carrying out the wishes of the men to be benefited by it, namely, the employees. It does seem to me that we might wait long enough for them in the convention which is about to meet to say whether they approve of this legislation and are willing to be deprived of the benefit of the legislation just upheld by the court, for which they have been struggling for half a century. It seems to me that that is a fair request.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I want to put out an interrogatory for consideration between now and the time when this measure next comes up, because it is one which, in my judgment, will have to be dealt with. It will take but a moment to state it.

This employers' liability bill is being supported upon the assumption that it is within the provisions of paragraph 3 of section 8 of the Constitution. I want Senators who give attention to legal matters to bear in mind what I say, because at another time I may urge it more at length. I think the author of this bill, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], will concede that he is proceeding under the authority of the provision to regulate commerce between the several States. If he is and it becomes a law, then, under section 2 of Article III of the Constitution, the jurisdiction will lie solely in the United States court, coming within the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Let me make that plain. If this legislation rests upon the authority of the Constitution, under the provision authorizing Congress to regulate commerce between the States, then the question of jurisdiction will follow under section 2 of Article III.

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties,

And so forth.

Senators are familiar with that provision. I find no provision here that would under any conditions entitle a State court to deal with the question of personal injury, because if we have the jurisdiction we have the exclusive jurisdiction, as has been held recently by the United States Supreme Court. We either have exclusive jurisdiction in the United States courts or we have none, and if we have the jurisdiction then the State courts have none.

That question is important to be considered in pressing this legislation. It is true it is a bill for arbitration in the main, but the last or the next to the last provision in the bill, section 30, provides:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as doing away with or affecting any common-law or statutory right of action or remedy for personal injury or death happening before this act shall take effect.

We have no authority to legislate that section, because the Supreme Court has said that we can not do that thing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The section to which the Senator directs attention simply saves existing rights.

Mr. HEYBURN. But we can not do it. The Supreme Court has said we can not confer upon the State courts any rights if the action is based upon the constitutional right reserved to the people.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What is the number of the section the Senator referred to?

Mr. HEYBURN. While it is negative, it is the same principle. It is section 30.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The effect of that is to provide that the law shall not be retroactive.

Mr. HEYBURN. But we can not do it. We have not the power under the Constitution. The whole difficulty arises in your very first initial step of assuming under the provisions of the Constitution authorizing Congress to regulate commerce between the States that you have the right to do something more. Just as soon as you base a statute upon that provision of the Constitution these other things fade away.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill proposes to create a new right for personal injuries sustained.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a right at common law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It proposes to create a new right applying to personal injuries.

Mr. HEYBURN. That of arbitration?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; it proposes to give to an employee who is injured in the course of his employment a right to recover certain definite compensation, wholly irrespective of negligence.

Mr. HEYBURN. It only establishes a rule of evidence under which he may recover. He might have recovered at common law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; it goes beyond that. If the Senator will be patient for a moment; let me state my proposition completely. It proposes to give to the employee a new right, namely, to recover for personal injury, whether that personal injury was due to the negligence of the employee or not. If we said nothing whatever with reference to cases arising prior to the passage of the act, the law would in all probability not be given a retroactive operation, because laws are not to be construed retroactively unless they so provide. But out of abundance of caution, so that there might be no doubt whatever as to existing cases, section 30 is inserted, which is wholly in the negative, simply "that nothing herein contained shall be construed as doing away with or affecting any common law or statutory right of action or remedy for personal injury or death happening before this act shall take effect." That is simply put in out of abundance of caution to prevent, under any circumstances, the law being given a retroactive effect.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator misconceives the point of my suggestion. I am not attacking section 30. I am only using it as a text to illustrate the principle that if we are going to put all the personal-injury cases that occur in connection with interstate commerce under the provisions of this law, then the jurisdiction of the court must follow. This law, in the main, is nothing but a regulation for arbitration. That is what it is in the main, but in two or three cases you have gone beyond that, and, of course, if it is an arbitration statute, it is intended to be a substitute for a law to determine the rights of parties.

I make these suggestions: There is more in the question than there might appear to be at first sight. You are taking out of the hands of the courts of the State all the power to deal with these questions. You are placing it in the courts of the United States, under section 2 of Article III, and you are giving that court jurisdiction. If it has jurisdiction, unless specifically provided otherwise, it has exclusive jurisdiction. So says the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, do you intend to give it exclusive jurisdiction in personal-injury cases? That is the question. The right of appeal is provided for from the arbitration. I would suggest that the brakes be put on this measure and we slow it down until that question is thoroughly considered. The people do not desire to lose the right to try these cases in the State courts.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator to state specifically the ground of his objection. The colloquy was broken into to such an extent that I failed to catch, not hearing all of it, the exact point. I should like to have the Senator state it. I am very much interested in it.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not an objection; it is a warning.

Mr. BACON. I thought the Senator made the point that there was a constitutional difficulty, and I wished to hear what it was.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a constitutional warning. The measure is based upon a proposition that would work an exclusive jurisdiction in the United States courts. I was merely inquiring of the Senator having charge of the bill whether or not it is the intention that the personal-injury cases, the class enumerated in this bill, shall only hereafter be tried in the United States courts, because I am quite sure that lawyers who look carefully into this matter will readily see that the whole right to legislate is based upon the provision of the Constitution giving Congress the power to legislate upon matters affecting commerce between the States, and, of course, there could be no other basis upon which Congress could assume jurisdiction over controversies between parties in the States. That being the case, the legislation itself rests solely upon the provision in the Constitution. Section 2 of Article III then confers the exclusive jurisdiction upon the United States courts.

I merely inquired whether or not the Senator had given that matter consideration, and I sent out the inquiry in order that it might be considered by those who will hereafter discuss and vote upon it. I did not intend to enter upon it, but all the way through, since this bill has been upon the calendar, I have had trouble in my mind as to the question of excluding all cases arising from a claim of personal injury in the State courts.

I am not introducing telegrams and letters which I am receiving in large numbers, but the telegrams that were read here this morning are evidently, a large number of them, based upon the assumption that they will still have the right in their local courts. We have plenty of places in the United States where the United States court sits hundreds of miles from the place where the cause of action arises; it sits 125 miles from our mines; and to persons who have personal-injury cases that is a burden. Large corporations operating there sometimes trade upon the fact that the party will not be able to get his witnesses to court, and all that kind of thing.

I merely send out the suggestions to gather such thought and consideration as may come from them.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The question to which the Senator from Idaho refers is one that the commission considered, and considered at considerable length. We were all anxious, if possible, to preserve the right to go to the State courts, but we were confronted in the matter with this practical difficulty. In the first place, I may say that there were two general schemes presented for the administration of the law. One was that we should create an administrative board of some kind or that we should devolve the duty of administration upon an existing political board or semipolitical board, like the Interstate Commerce Commission, and give that board or commission the authority to appoint various agents throughout the country to administer the law. After consideration we were of the opinion that that would be an unfortunate thing to do, because it would inevitably put it under more or less political influence.

For that and for other considerations that I will not stop to go into now we thought it was wise to leave the matter in the hands of the courts, and yet it was necessary that these cases should be in a position to be disposed of summarily to some extent. So we conceived the idea of having adjusters appointed. Inasmuch as in the last analysis you must preserve the right of trial by jury somewhere, we thought the simplest and easiest way to do so was to provide for these adjusters to be appointed by the Federal courts, and then provide that their findings should be filed in the Federal courts in the same way as a master or referee would do, and when they had been filed there then permit either party to have a jury trial. We can not, of course, deny a jury trial in the last analysis.

Mr. HEYBURN. In the United States court?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. Some court must appoint these adjusters. It would not do to turn that over to the various State courts. That would be of doubtful validity and would, moreover, result in a great deal of confusion. We therefore provided that they must be appointed by the Federal courts.

Now, having these adjusters appointed by the Federal courts there seemed to be legal as well as practical difficulties in the way of providing that they should make their returns to a State court. It seemed to us that being appointed by the Federal court, being in a sense an arm of the Federal court, their returns must be made to that court. I would be very glad now if some legal and practicable scheme could be suggested by which in the last analysis the parties might go to a State court, but I can see no legal or practical way of doing it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand the Senator concedes it is not considered that under this bill they could go to a State court?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; they could not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I undertake to say that out of thousands—I do not know, perhaps 20,000—of telegrams, petitions, and letters that are coming to Members of this body, and Members of the House, doubtless, were it known to the senders that they were to be deprived of access to the State courts there would not be one-tenth of them, because all the letters that we get indicate that where they favor it, it is because it is something that can be done without the machinery of the courts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It will be, I venture to say——

Mr. HEYBURN. You will have to go into court in order to get the adjuster appointed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know; but I am speaking of the disposition of the cases. The experience under the English law, in which there are more questions to be litigated than here——

Mr. HEYBURN. Of this class of cases?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Where there are more questions to be litigated than under our law, because we have simplified a great many of those questions, under the administration of the English law 90 or 95 per cent of them are settled without ever going into court at all.

I venture to say that our experience will be that at least 95 per cent of these cases will be settled without going to court at all. The Senator shakes his head. The Senator may prophesy about it as well as I, but the difference between us is that I have the English experience, at least, at my back.

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, conditions are so different in England. I did not intend to go so far into the matter. I only wanted to know whether we differed as to the primary facts. I find we do not, and that under this proposed legislation the State courts will be closed against the claimants or the defendants, as the case may be.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There will be no recourse to settle matters under this compensation act to any of the State courts, but the adjuster——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will bear with me for a moment—but the bill provides that an adjuster may go to any part of his district, to suit the convenience of the parties and the witnesses, to take testimony, and his expenses are to be paid by the Government; so that the adjuster will go to the place, perhaps, where the accident occurred or elsewhere to suit the convenience of the parties and witnesses in the various cases.

Mr. HEYBURN. How about the jury trial when it comes on?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When the jury trial comes on it will be the same as any jury trial in a Federal court.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator is better advised than many other Senators as to conditions that exist in the more sparsely settled sections of the country. We work about 4,000 miners, and accidents are occurring continually in our mines. Those injured must go to Coeur d'Alene city to reach the first United States court, which is about 125 miles. The taking of their witnesses is a burden of which they complain. I should like to see some more convenient and less expensive method provided; but I want to be right sure that it is so. I do not want to be reproached afterwards by those people saying: "We used to go just up here on the corner of Seventh Street to try our cases and walk back and forth to our luncheon, but now we must go and take a day's trip each way, and we have no wagon roads between the places at all."

I will not pursue the subject further. There are other matters that the Senate desires to consider. I want Senators, however, to give some thought to that matter before they take it for granted that all of these petitions and telegrams they are receiving are based upon a clear knowledge of what we are trying to do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator will suggest some concrete amendment on that subject.

GEORGE HALLMAN.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, on yesterday the bill (S. 2539) for the relief of George Hallman was passed by the Senate. I desire to move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and finally passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator why he asks for a reconsideration?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I had supposed that the bill had been recommitted to the Committee on Claims. I had made arrangements to be recognized, and I supposed it had been done several days ago. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims for the relief of an employee of the Government. I will state that the claimant is an old man. After the bill was reported the claimant's representatives appeared and said that he felt as though he would not like to have his claim presented and allowed, inasmuch as he is now in the employ of the Government. It is for the purpose of recognizing that condition that I desire to have the bill recommitted to the Committee on Claims, and not for the purpose of pressing it for a reconsideration or enlarging the amount.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois if——

Mr. CULLOM. I regard it as very important, Mr. President, that we should have a brief executive session.

Mr. BRISTOW. When will the Senate have an opportunity to take up the calendar again?

Mr. CULLOM. It was considered on yesterday.

Mr. GALLINGER. Probably to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know how long it will be necessary to remain in executive session?

Mr. CULLOM. It may not take more than a few minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there will be no objection, I presume, to resuming legislative business.

Mr. BACON. We do not want to be precluded by that.

Mr. SMOOT. Not by any manner of means.

Mr. GALLINGER. The motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER CO. (S. DOC. NO. 604).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 24, 1912.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

SIR: I am in receipt of a copy of a resolution of the Senate, reading as follows:

"APRIL 24, 1912.

"Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with copies of the reports of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and Commissioner of Corporations, and instructions of the President, concerning the proposed prosecution of the International Harvester Co. of America, made in the year 1907, and showing the facts concerning such proposed prosecution and the reasons for its abandonment."

In reply I am directed by the President to transmit to you, as I do herewith, copies of the following letters on the files of this department:

Letter from President Roosevelt to Charles J. Bonaparte, Attorney General, dated August 22, 1907.

Letter from William Loeb, jr., Secretary to the President, to Charles J. Bonaparte, Attorney General, dated August 23, 1907.

Letter from Herbert Knox Smith, Commissioner of Corporations, Department of Commerce and Labor, to the President, dated September 21, 1907.

Letter from Herbert Knox Smith, Commissioner of Corporations, Department of Commerce and Labor, to the President, dated September 23, 1907.

Letter from Oscar Straus, Secretary of Commerce and Labor to the President, dated September 23, 1907.

Letter from William Loeb, jr., Secretary to the President, to Charles J. Bonaparte, Attorney General, dated September 24, 1907.

I have the honor to be,
Very respectfully,
GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, before the communication is referred, I should like to make a few inquiries. This communication is in response to a resolution that was introduced into the Senate this afternoon by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON], as I understand. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. That is correct.

Mr. BRISTOW. Evidently the letter was prepared before the resolution was introduced and the Senator from Alabama understood just what reply the Attorney General was ready to make.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Evidently that is not so.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is not?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I will state that is not so. I have not had any communication whatever with the Attorney General, but I have seen in the press and heard otherwise that there was a question about this Harvester Trust, and I wanted to get the facts from the Attorney General.

Mr. BRISTOW. I was rather anxious, or rather interested. I should say, to know why the Attorney General should be so prompt in answering the resolution of the Senator from Alabama, which was introduced this afternoon, while the following resolution, which was introduced——

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I will suggest to the Senator that there was a resolution adopted yesterday that required much more matter to be disclosed, and the communication possibly may have been prepared in reference to that.

Mr. BRISTOW. A resolution was introduced on April 22 by Mr. OVERMAN and agreed to by the Senate, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, instructed to lay before the Senate all correspondence and information now in possession of the Department of Justice in relation to the proposed settlement between the United States and the International Harvester Co. by which the so-called Harvester Trust may be permitted to reorganize and bring its organization and business within the provision of the Sherman antitrust law as construed by the Supreme Court, together with any and all correspondence, information, and reports of the Bureau of Corporations relating thereto from January 1, 1904, to the present time.

It can be readily seen that this communication is not in reply to the Overman resolution. Now, I have been advised—at least I have seen it so stated in the public press—that a suit which was proposed to be brought against the Harvester Trust has been withheld upon the order of the President.

Mr. HEYBURN. What President?

Mr. BRISTOW. The present President within the last few weeks. Now, we have the spectacle of a resolution being prepared and introduced into the Senate this afternoon, and before it has been printed and furnished to Senators it is answered by the Attorney General, presumably because it is intended to reflect upon a man who is a candidate for the Presidency against the present occupant of that office, while the resolution that was introduced on April 22 remains unanswered by the present Attorney General, because, presumably, it might reflect upon him or his administration or the administration that is now in charge of the Government.

I simply wanted to call attention to the fact that the answer to the resolution introduced by the Senator from Alabama seems to have been prepared in advance to await the opportunity, while the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] remains unanswered; and it has not been long since the Senate was advised that the public interest would not permit the Attorney General to furnish it information it desired to have in regard to his relation with the International Harvester Co. Why is he so eager in his efforts to reflect on his predecessor while he conceals from us the facts as to his own conduct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication and accompanying papers will be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 25, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 24, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, imbue us plenteously with that wisdom which is above the price of rubies, which enables us to distinguish clearly the real values of life, lifts us above the sordid, puts a premium on high thinking and clean living, makes for righteousness in the soul, and leads heavenward. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The call rests with the Committee on the Territories. The unfinished business is House bill 13987, to create a legislature in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes. The House resolves itself automatically——

LEGISLATURE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. MANN. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] that I see he has reported House bill 38, a substitute bill on the same subject. I understood he desired to have that bill considered instead of the bill 13987, by unanimous consent. Of course that order would have to be made in the House instead of in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I did not catch what the gentleman said.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman reported yesterday House bill 38, with a substitute amendment, on the Territorial Legislature of Alaska.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman desired to ask unanimous consent to consider House bill 38 instead of the bill that we had under consideration last Wednesday. If that is to be done, it would have to be done in the House. The Committee of the Whole would not have the power to do that.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am obliged to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 38, with amendments, be substituted for House bill 13987, and I do it for this reason, Mr. Speaker: It was the intention of the committee to have House bill 38, with amendments, reported. I, as chairman of the Committee on the Territories, undertook to make that report, but the bill was printed as H. R. 13987, and it had my name on it as the patron of the bill. As a matter of fact, the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] is the patron of the bill. And I want to say here that Alaska has been very fortunate in the last two Congresses in having a representative of such high character and splendid ability as Judge WICKERSHAM. [Applause.] He has done an immense amount of work on this bill and is the patron of it. It was not the intention of the Committee on the Territories or my intention to deprive him of the credit of being the patron of the bill, and so we have subsequently reported the bill H. R. 38 with amendments. I ask that that be substituted for the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent that House bill 38 be substituted for House bill 13987, both being of the same tenor, for the reason he stated. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia just how much difference there is in the amendment in the nature of a substitute which is reported as House bill 38 from the bill which is now under consideration? How much difference is there?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Subsequent to the time that the bill was originally reported the committee acted upon three amendments and directed that they be offered here as committee amendments. Those three amendments have been incorporated in this subsequent print. That is the only difference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, the effect of the request of the gentleman, if granted, will be this: There will be pending in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union an amendment in the nature of a substitute. Any amendments that the committee may adopt to that amendment will be engrafted into it, but when the bill is reported to the House there will be no opportunity to obtain separate votes on such amendments. There will be only one amendment pending.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is practically the case with the bill that is pending.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The bill that is pending was reported, and every amendment adopted to it in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union must be adopted in the House by a separate vote, if it be demanded. The House bill 38, as reported, is in the nature of a substitute, and whatever is done in the committee will be reported to the House as one amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What I desire to say to the gentleman is, that the pending bill makes numerous amendments to the bill as originally introduced, and the subsequent amendments that were adopted were practically immaterial, so that all the important amendments that were adopted by the committee are embodied in the bill as reported—the bill numbered 13987.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As long as the House now understands what the situation is, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent to substitute House bill 38 for House bill 13987.

Mr. MANN. That is, to consider House bill 38 instead of the other bill.

The SPEAKER. To consider House bill 38 instead of House bill 13987. That eliminates the difficulty that the gentleman from New York was talking about.

Mr. FITZGERALD. House bill 38 is reported to the House with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I shall not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly, under the rule, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 38) to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes, with Mr. CLINE in the chair.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM].

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House is a bill to create a Territorial legislature in the Territory of Alaska.

Alaska is one of the organized Territories of the United States in the same sense that Arizona and New Mexico were Territories before their admission into the Union as States. A Territorial form of government is that form of government which Congress establishes in a Territory. While section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution provides that "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government," there is no such or any constitutional guaranty that the government created in a Territory shall be republican in form. The Constitution provides (sec. 3, Art. IV):

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

A Territory is property belonging to the United States. If once incorporated into the body of the Nation, it will, when future development shall make it proper, become a State in the Union, but during the term of its Territorial pupilage it is subject to control by such form of government as Congress in its wisdom, or want of it, may establish over it.

In pursuance to its duty to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory of Alaska, Congress created an executive department there and provided that the President should appoint our governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; by the same act of Congress of May 17, 1884 (23 Stat. L., 24), a judicial department was also created in the Territory, and we now have the same executive and judicial departments in Alaska that Arizona and New Mexico had while Territories. Alaska does not now have, and never has had, a legislative department. Alaska has no lawmaking body other than the Congress of the United States. For 45 years Congress has acted as the Territorial legislature of Alaska, and the bill now before the House proposes to advance one step and create a Territorial legislature to be elected by the people of that Territory. It is now proposed by the bill before the House to give the 40,000 American citizens in that Territory a legislative body, with powers so limited that while the legislature may aid in a small way in developing the Territory it can not dispose of any rights in the public property there, nor authorize or legalize any of those aids to monopoly which the people of our country condemn.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House simply creates an elective legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska. That and nothing more. It provides for the election by the people of the Territory of Alaska of 24 members of a local legislature. Eight of these legislators are to be members of the upper house, or senate, as the body is called in all the Territorial organic acts, and 16 of them are to be members of the lower house. It is provided in the bill that this house shall meet in the capital of the Territory of Alaska, at Juneau, once every two years. The term of that session is limited to 60 days, and the expense of the whole meeting of the legislature amounts to not more than $35,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the representation in the upper and lower houses based on population in each division?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; the apportionment is not based exactly on the population. The apportionment is made equally between the four judicial divisions that now exist by act of Congress in Alaska. The first judicial division is the southeastern division of Alaska, and the census gives the population of that division 15,216. The second is the Nome division in northwest Alaska, with a population of 12,351. The third division is the southern division, with a population of 20,078. The fourth division is the middle division, with a population of 16,711. And it is proposed to assume these four judicial divisions as the apportionment districts in the bill.

These four divisions are now judicial divisions. Congress has established the boundaries of these divisions by law, and we have a United States district court in each one of those divisions now. Each one of them has also a land office, and all public business in the Territory of Alaska is apportioned according to those four judicial divisions.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is that population the gentleman has given according to the census of 1910?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is according to the census of 1910. Now, lest somebody may think that there is something in this bill which might be harmful, lest some who are interested in conserving the great natural resources of this Territory might imagine there is something in the bill which would give unfair advantages to the big interests in that Territory, I will say that there is not any power given to the Alaskan Legislature to dispose of any part or portion of the public domain in Alaska or any of the natural resources of the Territory. The power conferred is greatly limited, and consists largely in police power. No Territorial legislature ever created west of the Mississippi was so carefully limited as the Territorial Legislature of Alaska is limited by this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is a unanimous report by the Committee on Territories and a unanimous recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill now under consideration by the House has been before Congress in substantially its present form for several years. On December 4, 1905, Mr. SULZER, of New York, introduced a bill in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress (H. R. 330) entitled "A bill to create the Territory of Alaska and to provide for the government of the same."

The bill provided for the creation of a Territorial legislature, with the powers usually granted to such bodies, to be composed of 28 members, to be elected by the people. One day later, in the same Congress, a bill was introduced by Mr. JONES, of Washington, now the senior Senator from that State, "Providing a Territorial form of government for Alaska." It, too, provided for the creation of an elective legislative body for Alaska of 40 members.

On June 7, 1909, in the first session of the Sixty-first Congress, I introduced the original bill, of which that now before the House is the remainder, after immaterial sections relating to other matters have been stricken out. Immediately after the introduction of the bill I sent several thousand copies of it to the people and press in Alaska, with letters asking for criticisms and suggestions. It was published in every paper in the Territory, and the people, press, and politicians of the Territory have discussed it from that day to this, and have almost unanimously urged the passage of it or some similar bill.

The spirit of the bill now before the House has been considered by the national conventions of both the great parties on several occasions, and has been approved wherever it has been considered.

APPROVAL IN NATIONAL PLATFORMS.

In the Democratic convention of 1892, held at Chicago, Grover Cleveland, of New York, was nominated for President, and Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois, for Vice President. The eighteenth section of the platform adopted by that convention declared in favor of the admission of New Mexico and Arizona as States and then declared in favor of Territorial government as follows:

And while they remain Territories we hold that the officials appointed to administer the government of any territory, together with the Districts of Columbia and Alaska, shall be bona fide residents of the Territory or District in which their duties are to be performed. The Democratic Party believes in home rule and the control of their own affairs by the people of the vicinage.

The Republican convention of 1892 met at Minneapolis. It nominated Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, for President, and Whitelaw Reid, of New York, for Vice President, and in its platform it declared:

All the Federal officers appointed for the Territories should be selected from bona fide residents thereof and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as practicable.

Four years later the Democratic national convention met in Chicago. It nominated William J. Bryan, of Nebraska, for President, and Arthur Sewell, of Maine, for Vice President, and in its platform again declared in favor of the admission of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma as States, and then said of the Territories:

While they remain Territories, we hold that the officials appointed to administer the government of any Territory, together with the District of Columbia and Alaska, should be bona fide residents of the Territory or District in which their duties are to be performed. The Democratic Party believes in home rule and that all public lands of the United States should be appropriated to the establishment of free homes for American citizens.

The Republican convention of 1896 was held in St. Louis. It nominated William McKinley for President and Garret A. Hobart for Vice President, and in its platform it favored the admission of the Territories within the United States as States and declared:

All the Federal officers appointed for the Territories should be selected from bona fide residents thereof and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as practicable.

The Democratic convention of 1900 met in Kansas City. It nominated William J. Bryan for President and Adlai E. Stevenson for Vice President and in its platform it declared in favor of the admission of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma as States, and then said:

We promise the people of these Territories immediate statehood and home rule during their condition as Territories, and we favor home rule and a Territorial form of government for Alaska and Porto Rico.

In the Democratic convention of 1904, at St. Louis, Alton B. Parker, of New York, was nominated for President and Henry G. Davis, of West Virginia, for Vice President. The platform again favored the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as States.

We also favor the immediate admission of Arizona and New Mexico as separate States and a Territorial government for Alaska and Porto Rico.

We hold that the officials appointed to administer the government of any Territory, as well as the District of Alaska, should be bona fide residents at the time of their appointment for the Territory or District in which their duties are to be performed.

The Republican convention of 1904, at Chicago, made no declaration in respect to home rule for Alaska, but it nominated Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, for President, and in his messages to Congress he called special attention to the necessity for home rule for Alaska, and in his message of December 3, 1907, he said:

I reiterate my recommendations of last year as regards Alaska. Some form of local self-government should be provided, as simple and inexpensive as possible; it is impossible for the Congress to devote the necessary time to all the little details of necessary Alaskan legislation.

At that time Alaska had both an executive and a judicial department similar to those created in other Territories, and it was of the necessity of creating a legislative department in Alaska, which it did not have, that President Roosevelt recommended to Congress. That missing department is provided in the bill now before the House.

The Democratic convention at Denver, in 1908, nominated William J. Bryan for President and John W. Kern for Vice President, and in its platform declared:

We demand for the people of Alaska and Porto Rico the full enjoyment of the rights and privileges of a Territorial form of government and that the officials appointed to administer the government of all our Territories and the District of Columbia should be thoroughly qualified by previous bona fide residence.

I make these quotations from the great party platforms in answer to any suggestion which may be made that the bill before the House is not approved as a political measure. In principle it has been approved time and again by both the national parties, as well as by President Roosevelt in his message of 1907.

APPROVAL BY ALASKA TERRITORIAL CONVENTIONS.

Not only have both great political parties in their platforms promised the people of the country and Alaska that Congress would form a Territorial government in Alaska and give the people there the right of self-government in so far as it is usual in Territories, but the Territorial conventions in Alaska of both parties have declared in favor of the same plan. Every Democratic Territorial convention held in that Territory has substantially declared in favor of the bill now before the House.

Both the Republican and Democratic conventions, held in Juneau, Alaska, in 1900, for the selection of delegates to their respective national conventions declared in favor of home rule; both the Democratic and Republican conventions, held in Juneau, Alaska, in 1904, for the selection of delegates to the national conventions passed similar resolutions. In 1908 both the Republican and Democratic Territorial conventions in Alaska passed similar resolutions, and the Republican convention instructed its delegates for Mr. Taft at the same time. Republican and Democratic conventions were held in Alaska this month. The Democratic convention was held on March 30 and, after nominating its candidate for Delegate to Congress, it adopted a platform, in which is this pledge:

HOME RULE.

The power to make the laws which are to govern us in our local affairs is but the application to Alaska of a right sanctified by the blood of our fathers and justified by more than a century of actual experience. Every Democratic convention ever held in Alaska has insisted upon that right, and we do but reiterate the utterances of those conventions when we again represent to Congress: First, that the people of Alaska want home rule; second, that the people of Alaska ought to have home rule; third, that until the people of Alaska get home rule they will never cease demanding it as the right of American citizens. And we pledge to the people of Alaska, if elected, our candidate for Delegate will use every effort to secure the enactment of a law giving to Alaska a local legislature, elected by the people, with power covering every rightful subject of legislation not essentially national in character.

Upon that platform the Democratic Party is appealing to the people of Alaska to elect their candidate for Delegate.

On the same day that the Democratic convention met in Valdez and adopted the foregoing plank in their platform the Republicans in Alaska favorable to the renomination of Mr. Taft met in Cordova. The Republican convention nominated two delegates to the Chicago convention and instructed them to vote for the renomination of Mr. Taft. At the same time and as a part of the same transaction it adopted a platform the second plank of which reads as follows:

We insist that Congress give us a full Territorial form of government, similar to that of the late Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, and that any official appointed or elected to fill an office shall be a citizen of the United States and elector of Alaska.

Both political parties in Alaska are appealing to the people there for support upon the ground that they represent a political organization which will give to the people an elective Territorial legislature similar to that provided for in this bill. The convention which nominated the Taft delegates and instructed them to vote for his renomination in Chicago adopted a plank declaring in favor of a Territorial form of government even more unrestricted than the one provided for in this bill.

APPROVED BY OREGON, WASHINGTON, AND WISCONSIN.

The Legislature of the State of Washington is Republican. On January 17, 1911, that legislature passed the following joint memorial, introduced by Hon. Frank P. Goss, of Seattle, requesting their Senators and Members in the House of Representatives to support the requests therein made:

House joint memorial No. 3.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas the Territory of Alaska is settled by a hardy, active, and energetic people, numbering more than 64,000 according to the Thirteenth Census, 1910, who have in the last 10 years added in gold and fish alone more than $225,000,000 to the wealth of the Nation, and whose trade with the merchants of the United States last year amounted to more than $52,000,000, being greater than our trade with China and twice as great in value as the trade with the Philippines; and

Whereas the development of the Territory is being greatly retarded by the want of a lawmaking or legislative body therein to be elected by the people:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Washington (the Senate concurring), That the Legislature of Washington does hereby declare its most earnest opinion that it is necessary to the development of the Pacific coast and of the resources and good government in Alaska that Congress shall, at the earliest possible date, pass an enabling act creating and providing for the organization of a Territorial legislature in Alaska to be elected by the American citizens resident therein, with such powers and limitations as have been usually given to and imposed upon such legislative assemblies in other Territories; and the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the State of Washington are hereby requested to aid and assist in the securing of the passage of such a bill.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the Senators from the State of Washington and to each Congressman from the State of Washington; also to each member of the Committees on the Territories of the House of Representatives and the Senate for their information in the premises.

Passed by the house January 17, 1911.

HOWARD D. TAYLOR,
Speaker of the House.

Passed by the senate January 20, 1911.

W. H. PAULHAMUS,
President of the Senate.

The Legislature of the State of Oregon is Republican, and on January 19, 1911, that legislature passed a joint resolution similar to the one passed by the State of Washington, as follows:

House joint resolution No. 4.

Whereas the Territory of Alaska is settled by a hardy, active, and energetic people, numbering more than 64,000 according to the Thirteenth Census, 1910, who have in the last 10 years added in gold and fish alone more than $225,000,000 to the wealth of the Nation, and whose trade with the merchants of the United States last year amounted to more than $52,000,000, being greater than our trade with China and twice as great in value as our trade with the Philippines; and

Whereas the development of the Territory is being greatly retarded by the want of a lawmaking or legislative body therein, to be elected by the people:

Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon (the Senate and House jointly concurring), That we do hereby declare our most earnest opinion that it is necessary to the development of the Pacific coast and of the resources of and good government in Alaska that the Congress of the United States shall, at the earliest possible date, pass an enabling act creating and providing for the organization of a Territorial legislature in Alaska, to be elected by the American citizens resident therein, with such powers and limitations as have been usually given to and imposed upon such legislative assemblies in other Territories; and the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the State of Oregon are hereby requested to aid and assist in securing the passage of such a bill.

Adopted by the house January 19, 1911.

JOHN P. RUSK,
Speaker of the House.

Concurred in by the senate January 26, 1911.

BEN SELLING,
President of the Senate.

Indorsement: House joint resolution No. 4. Chief clerk. Filed in the office of the seceretary of state January 31, 1911.

F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

The Legislature of the State of Wisconsin is Republican, and in June, 1911, at the request of Senator LA FOLLETTE, that legislature passed the following resolution declaring in favor of a Territorial legislature in Alaska:

Joint resolution (J. Res. 48, S.) memorializing Congress to grant to Alaska a Territorial form of government.

Whereas the Territory of Alaska has recently developed into a Territory of great wealth settled by a large number of worthy residents, mostly Americans, whose number is constantly increasing; and

Whereas industrial and social conditions there existent have suffered from the absence of a legislative body therein: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Congress of the United States be respectfully memorialized promptly to take such steps as may be necessary to provide for the organization of a Territorial legislature in Alaska, to be representative of the American citizenship there resident, with such powers and limitations as have usually been given to and imposed upon legislative assemblies in other Territories of the Nation; and be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Member of Congress and to each United States Senator representing this State, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the President of the United States.

THOMAS MORRIS,
President of the Senate.
C. A. INGRAM,
Speaker of the Assembly.
F. M. WYLIE,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Many other conventions of the people of the Pacific coast, without regard to politics, have passed resolutions in favor of a better government in the Territory of Alaska. Many of them have declared specifically in favor of the creation of an elective Territorial legislature in that Territory, while others have confined themselves to general phrases in respect to a better form of government there. However, all of the people of the Pacific coast understand that Alaska is without any legislative body, and it is generally recognized by the people of the coast, without regard to politics, that there can be no real development there until Congress shall have given to the people of the Territory the right to organize their own legislative body and make laws for their own government.

PRESS APPEAL TO PRESIDENT TAFT.

On September 29, 1909, before President Taft had declared any policy in respect to the creation of an elective Territorial legislature in Alaska, the united press, the mayors of incorporated towns, and the representatives of the larger business organizations sent him a telegram to Seattle, Wash., where he then happened to be, requesting him to recommend in his next message to Congress and give his support to the creation of an elective legislature in Alaska, as follows:

FAIRBANKS, ALASKA, September 29, 1909.

WILLIAM H. TAFT,
President of the United States, Seattle, Wash.:

A united press and people of Alaska, in aid of constructive legislation for the creation of a government by the people in this Territory, and in aid of the development of its natural resources, respectfully request you to recommend in your next message to Congress and give your support to the creation of an elective Alaskan legislature in substantial conformity with Delegate WICKERSHAM'S bill, introduced at the recent special session of Congress.

Newspapers: Fairbanks Daily News-Miner; Fairbanks Daily Times; Daily Nome Gold Digger, Nome; Daily Nome Nugget, Nome; Skagway Alaskan, Skagway; Daily Miner, Ketchikan; Daily Alaskan Dispatch, Juneau; Pioneer Press, Haines; Seward Gateway, Seward; Hot Springs Echo, Hot Springs; Tanana Leader, Fort Gibbon; Valdez Prospector, Valdez; Cordova North Star, Cordova; Tanana Miner, Chena; Daily Tanana Tribune, Fairbanks; Douglas Island News, Douglas. Mayors: E. Valentine, mayor, Juneau; W. B. Watts, mayor, Nome; T. Tonseth, mayor, Chena; L. Archibald, mayor, Valdez; C. Ott, mayor, Eagle; H. Ashley, mayor, Skagway; Jos. H. Smith, mayor, Fairbanks; E. O. Smith, president Sitka Chamber of Commerce; F. G. Hale, president Seward Chamber of Commerce.

That telegram was signed by all the newspapers in Alaska except two.

BILL APPROVED BY COMMERCIAL BODIES.

On April 20, 1911, all the commercial clubs of Seattle, with which Alaska does much of its trade, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That this joint Alaskan committee, representing the Arctic Club, the Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club, the Commercial Club, and the Alaskan committee of the American Mining Congress, hereby indorses the proposition of empowering the people of Alaska to exercise the right of local self-government by means of a Territorial form of government with an elective legislature, and we respectfully urge upon Congress and the President the enactment of the legislation necessary to carry the purposes of this resolution into effect.

BILL APPROVED BY PACIFIC COAST PRESS.

Not only have the national political conventions of the two great parties, the Legislatures of Oregon, Washington, and Wisconsin, and the political conventions of all parties in Alaska declared in favor of the development of government therein, but the matter has been widely and favorably discussed by the newspapers upon the Pacific coast and in Alaska.

The senior Senator from the State of Washington introduced the bill now before the House in the Senate at my request, and that fact has been referred to approvingly in the newspapers in his State. The leading Republican paper in the city of Seattle, of which Mr. Erastus Brainerd was for many years the editor, in its issue of May 25, 1911, in support of the nonpartisan efforts of all the commercial bodies of the city of Seattle in aid of the passage of this bill, said:

ALASKA NEEDS SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Senator JONES, of this State, and Delegate WICKERSHAM, of Alaska, are working in harmony on behalf of the bill prepared and introduced by the former providing for a full Territorial government for Alaska. As the Senate Committee on Territories, before which the matter first comes up, is almost entirely new, composed of Senators who have not committed themselves on the subject, the prospect for a favorable report on the bill is better than it was in any previous Congress.

There is not now and there has not been for years any sound argument for denying the people of Alaska the right which has been freely accorded other American communities situated as they are, that of local self-government with a local legislative body. Every one of the arguments used against the proposed form of government has been based upon misconception or upon downright misrepresentations.

These arguments can be easily refuted before any persons who care to inform themselves upon the subject. Alaska has a permanent population considerably larger than many of the States had at the time when they were admitted into the Union. Means of communication between the different parts of the Territory are far better than were the means of communication between different parts of the older Territories at the time when they were organized and given full powers of local self-government.

The influence of outside investors in Alaska has been much stronger before Congress and the departments than that of the permanent residents of the Territory. The big corporations which have made investments in Alaska do not care to find themselves subjected to the jurisdiction of a local legislature. They prefer the indifference of Congress to the activities of a local body interested in protecting the people.

Of course, each argument against granting Alaska Territorial government has to disregard absolutely every fundamental principle upon which this Government was founded, but many people are perfectly willing to abandon all questions of fundamental principle when the question is of the rights of a community in which they are not directly interested.

BRYAN FAVORS HOME RULE.

William Jennings Bryan, in a speech in the city of Seattle in October, 1909, in reference to this matter, declared:

Pioneers of this great Northwest, men far sighted, resolute in purpose, who braved the dangers of the wilderness of Alaska, have asked that they be recognized as capable of attending to their own affairs. Are you afraid to trust them? You can not refuse their request without reflecting on the principle of self-government. They have intelligence and capabilities as well as the right. Alaska should have the right of self-government.

When William Jennings Bryan, thrice a candidate for the office of President of the United States, said this in the natural amphitheater at the exposition grounds, where nearly 20,000 people had assembled to greet him, he was opposing the views of President William H. Taft, expressed on the same platform, on his recent visit to the exposition.

Mr. Taft said, in his exposition speech, September 30, that—

Local self-government or home rule in a country so large as Alaska, with a scattered nomadic population, intense local and sectional feeling, should not be given serious consideration until the population and developed resources of the country have increased to such an extent as to warrant the division of the Territory into more limited areas, where the inhabitants of each would have an opportunity of becoming acquainted and there would be some degree of similarity of interests.

He suggested that the local legislative powers be intrusted to a commission of five or more members, appointed by the President, to act with the governor in the matter of local legislation.

Alaska has a right to make her own mistakes—

If she makes mistakes she will suffer from them and then correct them; but if we deny her self-government and, in an attempt to dictate her local affairs, make mistakes, they will be responsible for the condition of affairs which follow. Alaska is asking for just what they are fighting for the world over. They want to be the architects of their own destiny and the guardians of their own affairs.

You can not refuse this.

I wish now to put in the RECORD a few editorials from representative newspapers of the Northwest in favor of the effort of Alaska to secure an elective legislative body; it would be easy to read 10 for every 1 that is quoted, but the following may be accepted as typical of the great mass of editorial comment in favor of the bill now before the House:

[Editorial, Seattle Times, Seattle, Wash.]

WHY SHOULD ALASKANS NOT GOVERN THEMSELVES?

Why should Alaska not govern itself? The question is pertinent. It comes at a time just succeeding the visits to Seattle of America's two most distinguished citizens, the one in official life, the other in private life—President Taft and Mr. Bryan.

Both of them had something to say about Alaska, and as is usually the case, each found himself on the opposite side of the question from the other.

President Taft, having appointed a governor from a point just about as far away from Alaska as he could get and still remain within the United States, says that on the whole he favors governing Alaska by commission.

Mr. Bryan favors home rule for Alaska. He believes that pioneer American citizens who are big and brave and strong enough to develop that wonderful Territory are able to govern themselves.

If Mr. Taft, after his preliminary training in Cuba and the Philippines, had been willing to let it go at that he would not have exposed himself to a charge of inconsistency, although there is not the least doubt that Alaskans, being the twentieth century representatives of the rugged type that has always pushed forward and built America from the beginning, are entitled to resent the imputation that they are in a class with men of Spanish descent. Alaskans generally are of Anglo-Saxon stock—the race above all others in the history of the world that has embodied the genius of self-government—while Cubans and the Filipinos are tinctured with Latin blood, the volatile, effervescent quality that does not readily adapt itself to "government by the people."

Almost immediately after visiting Seattle and saying that Alaska ought to be governed by a commission President Taft speaks to the people of Arizona, another community of broad-gauge citizens who have literally carved their own way out of the resources offered by nature, and to them he says:

"I am going to help carry out the promise of statehood for Arizona as far as I can."

There is scarcely a western man throughout the broad expanse from the Arctic to the Mexican line but will agree with the President that Arizonians are entitled to statehood. They have fought for it more than a generation; and they have forced the Republican Party to come to a declaration for separate statehood after Roosevelt and Beveridge would literally have rammed down their throats the abhorrent scheme of joint statehood with New Mexico for the sole purpose of depriving the mighty West of two United States Senators.

But if Arizona is able to govern itself, why should Alaska, which is self-constrained, reliant, and long-suffering, be placed under the domination of a "foreigner" as governor or under a "foreign" commission?

ALASKA, THE RED-HAIRED BOY.

The attitude taken by President Taft in regard to a Territorial form of government for Alaska is a sore disappointment to the bona fide residents of the Territory, who have been praying for relief from the present system, under which Alaska has been misruled. Assuming that the Chief Executive will adhere to his expressed policy in this regard, all hope for relief under the present administration is useless waste of energy, for, without the powerful aid of the President, Alaska has not enough friends in Congress to pass legislation.

The President favors government of Alaska by a commission of Washington officials. The idea is repugnant to American citizens. It implies a want of confidence in the people of Alaska to govern their own affairs. It is un-American in principle. Such a form of rule merits the most caustic criticism of the inhabitants of the Territory. And we doubt not that it will get it if attempted.

It is an unfortunate state of affairs to thus be placed on a par with the semicivilized people. The citizenship of Alaska may be said, without boasting, to be composed of the most progressive, the most self-reliant, the most intelligent of any in any State or Territory in the Union, if we may be permitted to place ourselves within this Union for purposes of comparison. The people in Alaska are pioneers, engaged in throwing into the channels of commerce the great resources of the Territory. They are hewing out homes in a great country for future generations. They are qualified in every respect for the full duties of citizenship. For the President to deny them this, their heritage, subject them to taxation without representation, compel them to be governed by a commission composed of officials who have no material interest in the country, and who will undoubtedly inflict upon us all sorts of theories of government, is not an encouraging prospect. Alaska is the red-haired boy in the Nation's family.

PEOPLE OF SITKA ADOPT HOME-RULE RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions indorsing the Wickersham home-rule bill were drawn up and adopted unanimously by the people of Sitka at a mass meeting held Cession day, October 18. Dr. Goddard presided as chairman of the meeting and the resolutions were introduced by E. Otis Smith:

"We, the people of Sitka, Alaska, in public meeting assembled on this forty-second anniversary of the cession of Alaska to the United States from Russia, believing that this great Territory has reached such a stage of development that Congress can no longer refuse to admit our people 'to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States,' as promised in the treaty with Russia, and that it is our God-given right as American citizens to ourselves enact the laws under which we must live, do hereby

"Resolve, That the bill introduced by the Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM, and now pending before the House of Representatives, to create an assembly in the Territory is to the best interests of Alaska, and will further its welfare and development."

[Editorial, Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Seattle, Wash.]

ALASKA WANTS HOME RULE.

Practically all of the newspapers published in Alaska, the mayors of all of the incorporated towns, and the presidents of all the organized commercial bodies in that Territory have united in a cable message to President Taft asking the support of the President for legislation for the creation of a government by the people for Alaska, and that the President urge upon Congress the creation of an Alaskan legislature in substantial conformity with the Wickersham bill.

This request should make a profound impression upon the President, who interested himself so strongly in procuring for the people of the Philippines that local self-government which Congress has persistently denied to the white Americans who people Alaska.

Alaska has been the stepchild among the Territories. All other Territories were accorded local legislatures from the moment of their creation, notwithstanding all the drawbacks of scanty population, meager resources, and imperfect means of communication. This has been the case since the foundation of the Government. Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, peopled by aliens to the traditions of self-government, were promptly given the privilege of conducting their local affairs. Alaska alone, for no reason save that outside investors there object, has been denied any share in its local government; can not make its local laws, or levy or disburse taxes for local purposes, save in the few and scattered municipalities.

From every standpoint the situation is outrageous. There is absolutely no excuse or warrant for it. It exists only because Congress and the Executive have been assured over and over again by representatives of the outside capital invested in Alaska that the people of the Territory did not really want a local legislature. The telegram from the representative people of Alaska to the President shows, beyond any question of a doubt, the falsity of that statement.

THE TERRITORIAL BILL.

We gather from the press dispatches that Delegate WICKERSHAM has introduced in Congress a bill providing a form of self-government for the people of Alaska. The information contained in the dispatches is meager, and only the barest outline of the bill is obtainable. It provides, however, for a legislature consisting of two branches, the senate to have 8 members—2 from each of the 4 judicial divisions—and a house of 16 members—4 members from each division. Provision is also made to limit the amount of taxes that can be levied upon real property to 1 per cent per annum.

We assume that the bill has been carefully drawn, and by one who is thoroughly acquainted with conditions in every part of Alaska, and, so far as we are able to form an opinion of its different provisions, it should be acceptable to Alaskans. That it will meet with opposition from the big corporations doing business in the Territory may be taken for granted, but these institutions may as well heed the handwriting on the wall—Alaska is going to have home rule, and have it soon.

[Editorial, North Star, Cordova.]

PRESIDENT IS SURPRISED.

Press dispatches state that President Taft was surprised at the storm of protests raised by his declaration against home rule. He was quoted as saying unofficially that he would make no recommendations to Congress touching the interests of this Territory until after he had visited the Northland.

We hope this is true, at least so far as self-government is concerned. He would find an entirely different state of affairs from what he has been led to believe. Judging from his remarks, the "interests" and not the common people have given him his views of Alaska and Alaskans.

With every newspaper in the Territory declaring for home rule, save two, controlled by corporations, it is not a difficult matter to gauge the public sentiment. Newspapers not serving special interests may be depended upon to voice the sentiments of their respective communities.

The community interests are their interests, and the nearer a paper can come to serving these the greater will be the influence and sphere of usefulness. We are satisfied that Mr. Taft will reconstruct his views once he is made acquainted with the real conditions in Alaska. When he sees and understands the aims, views, and ambitions of the representative American citizens of this Northland he will not want to deny them the privileges that are now extended to natives in other insular possessions.

[Editorial, Daily Miner, Ketchikan, Oct. 6, 1909.]

President Taft's speech on Alaska is a disappointment. He knows nothing of Alaska except from hearsay, and the only person authorized to speak for Alaska is JAMES WICKERSHAM. It follows then that Mr. Taft has utterly ignored the Alaskan Representative and listened to some of the ward heelers who are playing the political game in the Northland. He has ignored nearly all the mayors and nearly all the newspapers and says practically that at least 40,000 people up here don't know what they want, because a half dozen carpetbaggers told him so.

Mr. Clark in his speech has not committed himself to any political belief. He comes up here, of course, primed with the Taft idea of government by carpetbag, but had not set foot in the Territory an hour until he felt the unanimous sentiment for self-government. If he favored it the administration would recall him and if he opposed it an outraged people would accomplish his overthrow; so he said nothing. And nothing is just the proper thing to keep on saying until he visits the various parts of the Territory.

[Editorial, Alaska Daily Dispatch, Juneau, Oct. 2, 1909.]

The address of President Taft, while a blow to the advocates of Territorial government in Alaska, will not dishearten the brave men of the North who have been fighting for an American form of government. That the President of the United States should so broadly oppose such a move is indeed substantial opposition and the Territorialists can only hope by honest representation to overcome this opposition. That the President has been ill advised about conditions North goes without question. Now is the time for every Territorialist to buckle to the fight and stay with it until the victory is won. We have the argument and the facts. The opposition has the ear of the President for the time being. When the great light comes they will be exposed as obstructionists seeking to sack Alaska under the guise of being its benefactors. Do not be discouraged, but remain steadfast, demanding that right prevail.

[Editorial, Cordova North Star, 1909, Cordova.]

THE WICKERSHAM BILL.

Delegate WICKERSHAM has asked for an expression of home rule from Alaskan papers. His purpose is to interest President Taft in his measure by sending him the expressions obtained when the President reaches Seattle.

A good many people seem to have the impression that the granting of autonomy to Alaska means an additional expense and greatly increased taxes; that, in fact, the Territory must cut itself adrift from the Federal craft and sink or swim through its own efforts. This is not the intent of the Wickersham bill, as we gather from reading it. It is a compromise measure, the first step, as it were, for a fuller and more complete form of Territorial government to follow afterwards. The purpose is to retain all the benefits now derived from Federal sources and at the same time exercise control over a thousand and one things which materially affect the interests of the people living in the Territory and for which Congress is too busy to devote the time.

According to the bill no law should be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; the property of the United States shall not be taxed; nonresidents are to receive the same consideration in the matter of taxes as residents. No special franchise or privileges can be granted without the affirmative approval of Congress, but the legislature may, "by general act, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for manufacturing, mining, agricultural, and other industrial pursuits, and for the conducting of business insurance, savings banks (but not of issue), loan, trust, and guaranty associations, for the establishment and conduct of cemeteries, and for the construction and operation of railroads, wagon roads, vessels, and irrigation ditches, or for colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries, or any other benevolent, charitable, or scientific association."

The same laws as now in force against gambling and lotteries are included in the legislative functions, as well as the bonded indebtedness of municipalities. "No tax shall be levied for Territorial purposes in excess of 1 per cent upon the assessed valuation of property," nor shall any incorporated town levy any tax in excess of 2 per cent. All laws passed must be submitted to Congress for affirmative action. The bill provides that the expense of the legislative assembly shall be paid by the United States. Each member is to get $15 per day while the legislature is in session and 15 cents mileage for each mile traveled. The legislative assembly will take charge of the justices of the peace, probate judges, and other offices now held by commissioners, for which elections will be provided.

By the terms of the bill a "school and road fund is created from the revenues of all Federal licenses outside of incorporated towns, half of which is to be devoted to the schools and the other half to the roads outside of incorporated towns. Money from these sources is to be paid by the clerk of the courts directly into the hands of the treasurer of the Territory, instead of the United States Treasury."

It will be seen that the bill is far from being an out-and-out fledged Territorial bill, such as was granted to other Territories.

The people of Alaska are fully capable of looking after their own affairs. As for population, the lack of which is the principal criticism now heard, we shall have all the population we need in another three or four years' time. Meantime, we would like to have a little to say about the fashioning of this northland of ours; the people generally would like to have something to say, and some form of local government is necessary for giving them the elective representatives. This is the birthright of every American.

[Editorial, Pioneer Press, Haines, Sept. 24, 1909.]

The Pioneer Press received a wire from Delegate JAMES WICKERSHAM last Saturday asking us to join with him in sending a request to President Taft when he arrived in Seattle asking that he recommend that Congress pass a bill creating a territorial legislature for Alaska. The Pioneer Press wired Mr. WICKERSHAM, heartily indorsing the proposed move, as it knows it to represent the sentiments of an overwhelming majority of the people of Haines.

[Editorial, North Star, Cordova.]

MR. TAFT ON HOME RULE.

President Taft has spoken. He admits that this Territory has suffered from congressional neglect and that it is impossible for Congress to look after its legislative needs in detail owing to a press of other matters, and yet he would deny Alaskans the right to govern themselves.

Instead of allowing us a legislative body elected by our own people, he favors a plan for a bureau or commission at Washington, D. C. Here speaks the politician rather than the broad, conservative statesman; either that, or else Mr. Taft has been misinformed as to the real conditions in Alaska and has taken his views from those who seek to dominate the Territory politically and industrially, as they have heretofore and at the expense of the rank and file and their interests.

The press dispatches do not state whether this proposed bureau shall be elective or appointive. In either case it will prove a poor substitute for an elective legislature. If appointive, to whom will the President go for his advice in choosing men to act for Alaska? Not to the people of Alaska, that much is certain. It will be the same old game of politics that Alaskans have watched and suffered so long from already. A few persons with political debts to pay will be the real governing body, and the Territory will continue to be a dumping ground for those who can not be taken care of in the States owing to competition for congressional and senatorial favors. In the future, the same as in the past, capable, efficient, and honest Alaskans will be passed up and ignored for outside seekers of political crumbs. We hoped for better things at the hands of President Taft than that, and should the members of his commission be made elective we fail to see wherein a bureau maintained at Washington, D. C., would be an improvement over a local legislative assembly.

The old, worn-out, and threadbare statement that Alaska is not ready for self-government because it is too sparsely settled and its population too migratory has already served the purpose of designing politicians working for the big interests. How about the schools, the many fine residences, the many and growing number of farms, the costly public buildings, and more especially the thousands of women and children who now form a part of this northland? What about the natural and patriotic pride of the Alaskans for their northland? Do not these and a thousand other signs, the building of railroads, the public telephones, and electric light and power systems, the utilization of power, and the many small and growing home industries refute such an argument?

President Taft is quoted as saying that another objection to home rule is the fact that the centers of population would control politics. Certainly. Seattle and King County controlled Washington State politics for years. Portland is a greater political power than the whole of the State of Oregon. It has held absolute dominion so long that on numerous occasions the eastern Oregon people have threatened to form a separate State. During the present year the people of southern Oregon threatened to secede because of the dominating influence of Multnomah County politics. No matter how densely Alaska is populated, there will always be centers of population. The majority always rules, or are supposed to rule, in politics. Apportionment and everything else is based on population. The power of New York State politics for a long time was greater than that of the entire Western States combined. We are surprised that President Taft should urge such a reason for declaring against home rule.

The real truth of the matter is that the big interests do not want to see Alaska have any form of local government. Consciously or unconsciously, President Taft is playing into their hands. Most assuredly they do not want to see steamship rates regulated or the service interferred with in any manner, nor railroad rates and the transportation service subjected to inquiry, and, above all, they do not want to be taxed. Their desire and aim is to take away the millions that their capital will earn them to enrich eastern stockholders and others without having to pay toll to support any form of self-government. The immense fishing interests along the coast purpose to remain free from taxation. The present form of government is their ideal.

The longer self-government is held up and the right of franchise denied American citizens the better it will be for the big interests and the longer a few will profit at the expense of the country. Capital is needed to help develop the northland, and should be given every reasonable encouragement, but it should not be allowed to keep the Territory in thraldom, and Mr. Taft's announced policy will permit it to do that very thing.

[Editorial, Dawson News (Yukon Territory), Canada.]

HOME RULE FOR ALASKA.

Ex-Judge WICKERSHAM, congressional Delegate of Alaska, has the intention of presenting President Taft at Seattle with a petition requesting him to recommend in his forthcoming message to Congress a bill for the creation of an Alaskan Territorial legislature. Mr. WICKERSHAM has asked the Alaskan newspapers to sign this petition, and it is believed at this writing that all have done so with the exception of the Juneau Record, which is a strong Hoggatt organ. By virtue of the fact that the News has a large circulation along the American Yukon and in Tanana, a request has been made for its support to this movement.

The News has no hesitation in giving it and heartily indorses the proposed bill presented by Mr. WICKERSHAM to the last Congress. This is in itself a conservative measure, which has not found favor with the ultra home rulers of Alaska because it does not go far enough. But one can not fail to have confidence in the knowledge and experience of conditions in Alaska possessed by the Delegate and his ability to frame a form of government best suited to them. That he should begin by asking only a limited form of home government is undoubtedly wisdom, for many obvious reasons.

But the underlying principle is self-government and to this principle the News heartily joins the newspapers of Alaska in supporting. It could not be otherwise, as this newspaper has always been a consistent fighter for the extension of this principle to our own Territory, and this year had the satisfaction of seeing a wholly elective Yukon council in session, charged with the duty of administering our Territorial affairs. In our case it is home rule with certain limitations, but these are eminently necessary in order that we may have opportunity to prove our self-governing capacity and our self-sustaining ability before letting go of the paternal apron strings of the Federal Government. The situation is exactly the same in Alaska, and Mr. WICKERSHAM'S efforts for the creation of a Territorial legislature for Alaska have our most sincere support.

CONGDON THINKS ALASKA SHOULD HAVE HOME RULE.

Frederick T. Congdon, of Dawson, member of Parliament from the Yukon, arrived in town yesterday and left to-day on the Humboldt for Vancouver, where he will attend the meeting of the Canadian railroad commission October 27. From there Mr. Congdon will proceed to Ottawa, where Parliament convenes November 11.

Mr. Congdon takes issue with President Taft and the other opponents of home rule, and states that he believes Alaska is entitled to home rule; that its people are amply capable of governing themselves; and that home rule in Alaska would be as successful as it has proven in the Yukon, where conditions are analogous.

"I have not read President Taft's address in its entirety," said Mr. Congdon, "but I have read so many comments that I feel perfectly familiar with it. I do not want to appear to criticize your President, but I certainly feel that he has been misinformed and does not appreciate conditions in the North. It is ridiculous to say that Alaskans are not capable of self-government. I know no people in the world where the average standard of intelligence is so high. Of course you would make mistakes at first, just as the Yukon council did, but the government would be far more satisfactory than to be governed by officials at Washington. That people are not 'fit for self-government' has been the plea of autocrats the world over. The only way for people to become fit for government is by experience."

Continuing, Mr. Congdon stated that self-government was eminently satisfactory in the Yukon, and that the peculiar local needs of the people were given better attention than they could possibly receive under a government from Ottawa. Mr. Congdon stated that he thought Alaska was too large and had too many diversified interests to be placed under one government, and to obviate these conditions he believed it should be divided into two or three distinct territories.

[Editorial, Valdez Prospector, Valdez.]

The press dispatches do not make it clear just what kind of Territorial government in Alaska the President opposes. It already has everything that goes with an organized Territory, except a legislature and county organizations. Nobody has been heard to favor division into counties at this time. Nine-tenths of the people favor a local legislature, because they believe that such a legislature, made up of just such indifferent material as the average State legislature, can legislate for Alaska more wisely than a commission of eastern politicians who need the salary. They hope some day to convince Congress that this is so.

In the meantime it is useless to become excited and make an unseemly fuss because the cards are stacked. Some day governmental wisdom will learn that Alaska is quite as civilized as the Philippines. Until then let us keep on shouting for the old flag and an appropriation. The more appropriations the better. They always come in handy.

THE PRESIDENT'S POSITION.

The news that President Taft is opposed to a Territorial form of government for Alaska came somewhat in the nature of a bombshell explosion in its suddenness. For some time past many Alaskans had fondly deluded themselves in the hope that the election of Taft, with his predisposition to deal out justice equitably and fairly, would bring a surcease of troubles under which we labor.

Of course there is a great deal to be said for Mr. Taft's side of the argument, and he can not be accused of having taken his present stand on Alaskan affairs hurriedly. He has given the subject deep study. While it is admitted that the people of Alaska would be placed under a heavy burden of expense by Territorial form of government, we fail to see how the organic law suggested would allow the larger centers of population to dominate the smaller ones, as the Executive claims, any more than is the case in any State in the Union.

Being a lawyer of no mean ability, we should have thought that President Taft would have known that Alaska is the one country in the world where the American Constitution has not followed the American flag. One of the principles laid down by our forefathers shortly after their victory in the Revolutionary War was that there should be "no taxation without representation." Yet to-day Alaskans are in precisely the same position as were the American colonists before the tea-party episode in Boston Harbor.

Every man has a right to a voice in the making of the laws which he must obey. It is one of the inalienable rights of every free American citizen. It is true that his right of voice may not always be wisely exercised, and it is equally true that the benefits derived therefrom are often of a minor value. But it is his right just the same.

Now the question confronting Alaskans is: "Is the right of electing a legislature and making laws to suit your conditions worth to you what it will cost?"

President Taft says it is not.

Most Alaskans beg leave to differ.

[Editorial, Tanana Leader, Fort Gibbon, Sept. 9, 1909.]

Miners and others, according to Fairbanks papers, are devoting much time to the discussion of the bills introduced into Congress by Delegate WICKERSHAM. Full criticism of the various measures was invited by the Delegate, and he is too astute a politician and too well acquainted with Alaskan characteristics to expect that they will not be attacked at every vulnerable part—their weak spots held to the light, while by many the stronger points in their make-up will be lost sight of. If the manner of man WICKERSHAM is may be taken as a criterion, he will pay heed to what he hears, accept such suggestions as he believes will add strength to the bills, and then fight for their passage by Congress in the shape he thinks the most feasible. He is not likely to incorporate in any of them anything that his own judgment or conscience does not approve, for, to put it mildly, self-reliance is the finale of WICKERSHAM'S philosophy.

Of the four bills, what is termed the Territorial bill is the most important. The section in this bill more vigorously assailed than others reads as follows:

"SEC. 26. That all laws passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Alaska shall be submitted to Congress by the President of the United States, and, if disapproved by Congress, they shall be null and of no effect."

Really, it would appear that the objectionable features of this section are microscopic, if not nonexistent. Note the difference in the necessity for Congress to approve laws before they can become effective from the necessity to disapprove them before they can become noneffective, and the danger from the above-quoted section will be seen to be small. If Congress should ever find time and inclination to nullify a law passed by the proposed assembly (which might not happen at all), Alaska would be in no worse condition with regard to that particular law than it would be—having no assembly of its own—should Congress fail to pass the law in question. And surely, if Congress should ever so nullify a law, enough good would still remain to make us all thankful we had advanced from the position occupied at the present time.

As a whole the Territorial bill is remarkably good, and Delegate WICKERSHAM, when he returns to Washington, ought to know that in the fight for its passage he has the backing of a people who, though scattered over a Territory immense in area, are as one on a subject so vital to their future welfare.

[Editorial, Nome Gold-Digger, Nome.]

Delegate WICKERSHAM invites the friendly criticism of the Alaskan people concerning the bills he introduced in Congress last winter, and by so doing paves the way for them to work in conjunction with him on Alaska legislation.

Of course a Representative could not adopt such a wide-reaching system of arriving at the desires of the people and then actually do everything they ask, but he will be able to determine a great number of their wants and then do the best possible toward obtaining them.

Representatives of and for the people sometimes forget that they are this, and legislate according to their own ideas, giving no thought to the public popular opinion. One man thinks for the thousands. But with WICKERSHAM he wants the expression from the people themselves. He would have them respond to his circular letters containing copies of the bills he introduced offering suggestions concerning them.

It is rather nice in the Delegate to extend such an invitation to the Alaskan people, whether their suggestions are acted upon or not. It will give the people a chance to say something about the needed legislation, pleasing them much; for men are flattered when they are told that "We will do this thing or that."

The Delegate asks for suggestions as to the legislation the people want, and will take from the numerous letters he receives a general impression. He will draw his own conclusions from the letters and then act according to his own judgment. Besides, WICKERSHAM is to visit Alaska this summer, and no doubt will make an effort to get at the wants of the people by actual contact with them.

Though little was effected for Alaska the past winter, WICKERSHAM worked hard, and now that Alaska governors will not be permitted to "butt in," future Delegates may accomplish something worth while.

[Editorial, Seward Gateway, Seward, June 12, 1909.]

While Delegate WICKERSHAM'S home-rule bill is an extremely modified form of self-government, it is a step in the right direction. At all events it can be no worse than the present system of government under which Alaska struggles, ruled as it is by officials who have never seen the Territory, know nothing of conditions maintaining, fail to recognize its commercial importance, and who are indifferent regarding its welfare and advancement.

[Editorial, Daily Miner, Ketchikan, Alaska.]

PEOPLE NEED HOME RULE.

President Taft has declared that the present system of governing Alaska is not satisfactory. He wants to change it, and in that respect he is in accord with 90 per cent of our population. One difference between Mr. Taft and the rest of us is the way the change is to be made. Mr. Taft wants to add to his already overgrown appointive privilege by being given the power to select a commission to formulate laws for Alaska, and we want to elect our own commission to do that work.

Mr. Taft is inconsistent. He has already appointed everyone who has anything to do with the governing of this Territory, and admits it is a failure.

In order to correct that failure he proposes to appoint a lot more, who, if they consistently follow the course of the previous appointees, will only make the failure more gigantic.

No question is ever settled until it is settled right, and no system of government was ever worth living under until it got into the hands of the people who are to be governed. A commission of outsiders can never be made to stick in Alaska or any other country where the population is not chicken livered; so all this talk of an appointive commission is drivel so far as the settlement of the Alaska question is concerned. Nobody believes in it, and nobody wants to.

The nearest solution of the question is embodied in the Wickersham bill. It assures sensible legislation, and allows of nothing else. It is less expensive than the present system or the proposed commission. It restricts extravagance and forbids the creation of Territorial debt. It adopts all that has proven beneficial to other Territories and eliminates all the injurious. It is the right way to settle the question if the majority is to be given first consideration.

[Editorial, Valdez Prospector, Valdez, June 17, 1909.]

HOME RULE FOR ALASKA.

Delegate WICKERSHAM'S bill to give Alaska a Territorial legislature will probably have to be introduced into two or three Congresses before it can get through, but local government will come sometime. A local lawmaking body which can legislate with some knowledge of local conditions and needs is the right of the Territory, and its importance is recognized by the most virulent opponents of home rule by repeated urging of a code commission to recommend legislation to Congress. The same object is sought to be accomplished by both projects.

Opponents of Territorial government have always set up a straw dummy to throw bricks at. They have pointed to the awful expense and general impracticability of county government in so sparsely settled a Territory as Alaska. It would be difficult to find a man who has ever advocated county organization in Alaska. The sole demand has always been for a local legislature, and the demand has always been made with full knowledge of the fact that Alaska legislatures would be composed of no better material than State legislatures—that is to say, an Alaska legislature would contain more cheap men than bright ones, more self-seeking curbstone politicians than capable legislators, nearly as many grafters as honest men. That is the way State legislatures are made up, but nobody seriously urges their abolition on that account. Long experience in self-government has taught the American people that legislators are generally as good as their average constituents, and that government by the people is a little better than government by monarchs and viceroys.

Since the visit of Secretary Fisher to the coal region in southern Alaska last summer, and on January 8, the people there held a nonpartisan convention at Valdez and formulated their suggestions for the settlement of the coal and other questions in which they are so deeply interested. Copies of their conclusions, in a series of resolutions, will be immediately sent to Members of Congress; and the first one of these declares in favor of home rule for Alaska in the following form:

HOME RULE.

The question of paramount importance to the 40,000 former citizens of the United States now residents of Alaska is that of the right to govern themselves and regulate their own local affairs, a right that is of inestimable value to a free people, the basic or fundamental principle of the Government of the United States, and the birthright of every American citizen.

We therefore demand the same rights of self-government that have been accorded to every other Territory of the United States occupied and settled by American citizens; and we further demand the abolishment of a bureaucratic government 5,000 miles away, often totally ignorant and usually indifferent to the actual needs of the people of this vast Territory.

I have thus quoted liberally from so many nonpartisan and partisan sources and the newspapers in and near Alaska to show the House that fairly and publicly this bill and the legislature which it purposes to establish in Alaska have long been widely and favorably discussed. These quotations are good evidence that the people in that Territory are acquainted with the proposed action of the House and unanimously indorse the pending bill. Then, too, these extracts contain conclusive evidence of my assertion that the conditions there demand the enactment of the bill, and also answer in a most able manner all objections made to its passage.

UNANIMOUS APPROVAL OF HOUSE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES.

Finally, by way of specific indorsement, the Committee on the Territories of this House, composed, as it is, of 16 Representatives, Democrats and Republicans, reported this bill unanimously after it had been scanned for almost three years in committee and after each line had been carefully examined and favorably approved by a subcommittee composed of both Republicans and Democrats.

THE NECESSITY FOR THE BILL ADMITTED.

The day after President Taft received the telegram from the united press and people of Alaska, on September 29, 1909, he delivered an address in Seattle, in which he strongly proclaimed the necessity for a local legislature in Alaska. He said:

Alaska is a country of immense expanse, and the governmental needs of the southeastern portion, near to Washington and the Northwest, are quite different from those of Nome and the Seward Peninsula and of the valley of the Yukon. Such a Territory has need of local legislation and local government, which can only be understood by those who are on the ground; and it is utterly impossible and impracticable for Congress, in its legislation, to govern the details by legislation required for the best development of the Territory.

Certain general laws, like the mining laws, the forestry laws, the customs laws, and the land laws, should be passed by Congress, and perhaps executed by national officers, but this would leave a wide domain for domestic legislation which, it seems to me, ought to be intrusted to some local authority on the ground and having a knowledge of local needs. Of course, if the Territory were settled with a permanent population, more or less equally distributed through its extent, such legislative power might be intrusted to an elected legislature; but, for the reasons I have given, it seems to me that it would be much wiser to intrust this local legislative power to a commission of five or more members, appointed by the President, to act with the governor in the discharge of such legislative function. It seems wise not to confer legislative functions on the governor alone, but to assist him in its exercise by the addition of competent persons, who will live in the Territory, familiarize themselves with its local needs, and bring to the attention of Congress and the Executive such additional legislation as may from time to time be wise.

In his message to Congress at the beginning of the second session of the Sixty-first Congress, he first recommended legislation on this subject to Congress. He said, among other things:

With respect to the Territory of Alaska, I recommend legislation which shall provide for the appointment by the President of a governor and also of an executive council, the members of which shall, during their term of office, reside in the Territory, and which shall have legislative powers sufficient to enable it to give to the Territory local laws adapted to its present growth.

* * * * * * *

The present system is not adequate and does not furnish the character of local control that ought to be there.

And in his message to the third session of the Sixty-first Congress he objected to an elective form of legislature in Alaska, but strongly declared in favor of an appointive form, as follows:

With reference to the government of Alaska I have nothing to add to the recommendations I made in my last message on that subject.

* * * * * * *

It is far better for the development of the Territory that it be committed to a commission to be appointed by the Executive, with limited legislative powers sufficiently broad to meet the local needs, than to continue the present insufficient government with few remedial powers, or to make a popular government where there is not proper foundation upon which to rest it.

* * * * * * *

The passage of a law permitting the leasing of Government coal lands in Alaska after public competition, and the appointment of a commission for the government of the Territory, with enabling powers to meet the local needs, will lead to an improvement in Alaska and the development of her resources that is likely to surprise the country.

Secretary Fisher, of the Interior Department, in his Chicago address, declared the general policy of the administration in respect to Alaska which he said had been discussed with President Taft, met with his approval, and will have his support. After paying the people of Alaska a well-deserved compliment, he said:

They are entitled to a Territorial government better adapted to their peculiar local conditions and needs.

In his recent report to the Secretary of the Interior, the governor of Alaska, while not approving the elective form of legislature for the Territory, does approve the necessity for some form of legislature there, as follows:

That the members of a Territorial legislature would have a better understanding of local needs than has been shown by the National Congress, and also that their time would be devoted to the consideration of these things, as the time of Congress is not and can not be, is obvious, and this fact is almost exclusively responsible for the attitude of those who are both sincere and thoughtful in their advocacy of a change in the form of government.

And now, after three years' consideration of the necessity for a legislative body of some sort in Alaska, after hearing the merits of each plan discussed, both in Congress and in the press, after the present elective bill has been under consideration in both Houses of Congress for that period of time and after its unanimous report by the House Committee on the Territories with a recommendation that it do pass and become the organic law of Alaska, in his special message of February 2, 1912, the President again declares, in more forceful terms, his judgment that Congress ought to provide a lawmaking body for the Territory of Alaska. In that message he says:

There is nothing in the history of the United States which affords such just reason for criticism as the failure of the Federal Governmet to extend the benefit of its fostering care to the Territory of Alaska. There was a time, of course, when Alaska was regarded as so far removed into the Arctic Ocean as to make any development of it practically impossible, but for years the facts have been known to those who have been responsible for its government and everyone who has given the subject the slightest consideration has been aware of the wonderful possibilities in its growth and development if only capital were invested there and a good government put over it.

* * * * * * *

I have already recommended to Congress the establishment of a form of commission government for Alaska. The Territory is too extended, its needs are too varied, and its distance from Washington too remote to enable Congress to keep up with its necessities in the matter of legislation of a local character.

The governor of Alaska, in his report which accompanies that of the Secretary of the Interior, points out certain laws that ought to be adopted, and emphasizes what I have said as to the immediate need for a government of much wider powers than now exists there, if it can be said to have any government at all.

Thus, again and again, the President and those by his appointment, who have even closer relations with the conditions in Alaska than he has, have approved the necessity for a lawmaking body in that Territory, "with," to use the exact language, "limited legislative powers, sufficiently broad to meet the local needs." No one can read the public utterances of the President, in his speeches and messages, without concluding that he believes strongly that there is an overwhelming necessity for a legislative body in Alaska, and with that judgment the people of the Pacific coast, the people of Alaska, and I distinctly agree. There is, then, but one remaining question, and that is: Shall that legislative body be appointed by the President or elected by the people of the Territory?

AN APPOINTIVE ALASKAN LEGISLATIVE COMMISSION.

There is much opposition to the appointive commission form of legislature for that American Territory, which was plainly and forcefully exhibited in the Senate two years ago in considering a bill of that nature. Immediately after the recommendation by the President in his message of December 7, 1909, that Congress pass a bill to create an appointive legislative commission for that Territory, such a bill was prepared in the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and was introduced in the Senate on January 18, 1910, reported with amendments on the 24th instant, and on the same day the Senator from Indiana moved that the Senate proceed with its consideration.

There was no printed report on the bill, but the Senator from Indiana, in his statement to the Senate, very forcibly presented the necessity for the creation of a legislative body in Alaska in the following language:

It has become clear, Mr. President, therefore, that there must be some body of men created who can legislate for this district, this Territory, as the bill now calls it, from first-hand knowledge; men who will be absolutely, as far as legislative safeguards can provide, above any selfish consideration whatever; men who can take up the entire subject of necessary legislation for Alaska and amend or repeal or otherwise modify such existing laws as are not wise or have become out of date, or otherwise inapplicable, and enact any new legislation which the situation may require. This bill accomplishes that purpose as fully as the committee feel that legislation at present can accomplish.

The Senate bill was very earnestly supported by the Senator from Indiana and criticized by many Senators in debate on January 24, 25, 26, and on February 14, 15, and 22, 1910. A full report of the opposition to the appointive commission plan will be found in the Senate proceedings of those dates, and on the last day it went over, on motion, under Rule IX, and was never heard from or considered again.

In his testimony before the Senate Committee on Territories, on May 23, 1911, in support of Senate bill 1647, being a substantial copy of the one now before the House, Senator JONES, of Washington, was asked about the Senate opposition in 1910 to the Senate bill to create an appointive legislative council for Alaska, and he said in reply to inquiries:

Senator BROWN. There was a bill reported by this committee, was there not, embodying the President's ideas?
Senator JONES. There was.
Senator BROWN. And it died on the calendar?
Senator JONES. It died on the calendar after being called up and discussed at considerable length, and that discussion was such as to convince almost everyone that it stood no chance whatever of passing in the Senate. I do not think there is any doubt in the mind of anyone that such a bill would have absolutely no chance whatever in the House of Representatives, and I do not think it would stand any chance whatever in the Senate. So my judgment is that the only proposition now upon which we can compromise and which stands any chance of getting through is the proposition for a Territorial form of government with an elective legislature. In my judgment, legislation of this kind can pass the House and the Senate and I believe the President would sign it.

A bill creating an appointive legislative commission very similar to that introduced in the Senate was introduced in the House on February 1, 1910, and referred to the Committee on the Territories. Although many long hearings were held by that committee on the general subject of creating a legislature for Alaska, no report upon that bill was made to the House during the Sixty-first Congress, and it may fairly be said that a bill to create an appointive legislative commission could not have been reported from that committee or passed by the House in that Congress.

Two conclusions may fairly be deduced from the foregoing review of the record relating to this subject: First, that the President and the Secretary of the Interior, the Senate committee two years ago, and all others conversant with the conditions in Alaska, agree that there is a grave necessity for the creation of a legislative body in Alaska; and, second, there is no reasonable probability that Congress can ever be induced to pass an act to create an appointive legislative commission for that Territory.

It follows that unless Congress shall pass an act to create an elective Territorial legislature, such as all other American Territories have had, Alaska must continue to stagnate for the want of governmental development. The bill now before the House is such a bill. Its provisions are not new; they are drawn from those organic acts which have been copied and recopied by Congress in the creation of Territories in the great West. The utmost care has been taken to follow precedents with which Congress and the courts are entirely familiar, and also thereby to assure Congress and the country that in applying them to Alaska no new or untried power is given to the legislative body.

So far as I am informed, no objection is made to the contents or internal character of the bill before the House. The objections made are to the passage of any bill giving the people of the Territory the right to elect a legislative body. The necessity for the creation of a legislative body is admitted and the objections go only to the elective feature of the bill.

OBJECTIONS TO THE BILL BEFORE THE HOUSE.

The objections of the President to the elective form are all fairly contained in one sentence in his message of December 6, 1910, as follows:

I am convinced that the migratory character of the population, its unequal distribution, and its smallness of number, which the new census shows to be about 50,000, in relation to the enormous expanse of the Territory, makes it altogether impracticable to give to those people who are in Alaska to-day and may not be there a year hence, the power to elect a legislature to govern an immense Territory to which they have a relation so little permanent.

It will be noticed that there are but three objections stated. First, "the migratory character of the population"; second, "its unequal distribution"; and, third, "its smallness of number in relation to the enormous expanse of territory." To these is added, in the recent report of the governor of Alaska, a fourth—the alleged increased financial burden upon the people of the Territory which such a legislature would entail.

It is my intention, now, to consider these four objections in order and to place the facts before the House, so that you may judge by a comparison with the conditions in the earlier Territories when they were created and given elective legislative bodies, whether Alaska is not now equally entitled to the same advantage.

"MIGRATORY CHARACTER" OF ALASKA'S POPULATION.

Is the population of Alaska of such a migratory character that it can not be intrusted with the power to elect a Territorial legislature with carefully limited powers, such as all other Territories have had? This objection was publicly made in Seattle by the Attorney General of the United States at the time of his visit to Alaska in 1910, and was so fully answered at the moment by an editorial in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer that I shall quote from Mr. Brainerd's editorial in answer to the objection.

It is headed "Permanent population":

In discussing the question of the possible granting of local self-government to the people of Alaska, Attorney General Wickersham said: "In considering a government for Alaska, you must consider that the people do not go to Alaska to live, as they came to Washington. They go there to make their pile and then get out. For that reason the population of Alaska is transitory.

That is a statement by the Attorney General of the United States.

The paper then concludes:

This sounds logical, but it is really fallacious. If Mr. Wickersham were as familiar with the history of the growth and development of the far West as are those who have spent some years on the frontier he would know that conditions to which he refers as existing in Alaska existed in precisely the same shape and with even stronger force in every one of the present great States of the Pacific. Indeed, they existed at one time in Australia, in South Africa, and in every new possession when first offered to the world.

When California was admitted into the Union it is a safe bet that more than 90 per cent of the population, outside of the native Californians of Spanish stock, had no intention at the time of ever making permanent homes in California. Practically every man who went to California during the gold rush, and for many years thereafter, went there "to make a stake," expecting to return with it to his native State. Even during the sixties everyone in California spoke of the East or of the Middle West, as the case might be, as "home."

The same was exactly true of the population of Nevada, of Idaho, and of Montana when they were organized as Territories. It is safe to say that Alaska at the present moment has a greater number of residents that have determined to spend the rest of their days in that Territory than either California or Nevada had when admitted into the Union, or than either Idaho or Montana had when they were erected into Territories. Mr. Wickersham, if he had gone under the surface, would have found that the man who has spent a few years in Alaska, when he leaves that Territory, always has a hankering to return to it, and that there are thousands of men who have no thought of ever making permanent homes elsewhere than within the borders of the great Territory that fascinates all who have spent any length of time within its borders.

It is a mistake to suppose that the prospectors and miners in the great West are entirely transient, nomadic, or migratory. Those who crossed the plains in 1849 remained and built San Francisco and Sacramento, laid the foundations of a hundred cities in California, and in 1850, within one year after their arrival, erected the noble superstructure of the State of California. Their kind trailed through the mountain passes of Nevada, Montana, Colorado, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington, and when miner's luck and hard labor led them to the pay streak or the mother lode they built Virginia City, Helena, Butte, Anaconda, Denver, Boise, Portland, Spokane, and Seattle. Wherever the prospector and miner in the far West found the pot of gold he set a stake, brought his family to it, and became the foremost citizen of the camp, the town, the city, and the State. And yet prospectors and miners are, to some extent, migratory, else there would never have been progress and growth in the West. The miners of Circle City stampeded to Dawson in 1897, and back to Fairbanks in 1903. Some of them went to Nome, and later to the Iditarod—yet all remained in Alaska. They built Circle, Tanana, Nome, Fairbanks, and Iditarod, and laid the foundations of many other towns in the great interior of Alaska. They are men of strength, courage, and daring. They are the best young blood of the East—they are from New England, Pennsylvania, Virginia—the South, and the West. They are your brothers, and their wives are your sisters. They are Anglo-Saxon, Irish, Dutch, Scandanavian; but at heart Americans.

Migratory? The mayor of Juneau, Emory Valentine, the wooden-legged Peter Stuyvesant of Alaska, has resided there 27 years; the mayor of Fairbanks, since 1898; the mayor of Nome, since 1900; the mayor of Skagway, for 25 years; the mayor of Valdez, for 12 years. Royal, robust, red-headed "Mother" Card, who carried her sick baby over Chilkoot Pass in 1897 and buried it on the shores of Lake Lindeman, runs a hotel and restaurant in Fairbanks, honored and respected by more old "sourdoughs" than any woman in Alaska. Thousands of her kind, brave pioneer women of Alaska, quietly tend the domestic hearth in cabins and more pretentious homes, where they have ruled for 10, 12, 15, or more years. Big Bill McPhee, who went from Juneau to Forty-Mile and Circle in the eighties, yet does more charitable work among the few unfortunate old prospectors in the Tanana Valley than the world knows about, while his friend, good old Dr. S. Hall Young, who established the Presbyterian missions in Alaska in the seventies, last winter built a church for the miners in the Iditarod. Father Munro, the gentle Catholic missionary, like Bishop Rowe, yet travels the arctic trails from camp to camp, as both have done for nearly 20 years. Prospectors like Joe Juneau and Dick Harris, who discovered Silver Bow Basin in 1880, laid the foundations of a capital city and located gold mines which increase in value and extent as the years go by; French Pete, who found and gave to John Treadwell a quartz claim which made him both famous and wealthy; Felix Pedro, the discoverer of the Tanana placers; Jack Smith, who located the Bonanza copper field on the Chitina River, to which the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate has built a $20,000,000 railroad; Jack Dalton, who blazed the trails into the Porcupine, the Alsek, and the White; D. B. Libby and John Dexter, the pioneers of the Nome gold field, were "migratory" in that they searched for the hidden treasures of nature, but they were free, clean, vigorous-minded Americans and nation builders at the same time.

Jack McQuestion, Arthur Harper, Fred Mayo, Fred Hart, Frank Densmore, and John Minook were prospectors, trappers, and traders who first invaded the wilderness of the Yukon, Tanana, and Kuskokwim more than a quarter of a century ago. They blazed the trails, established trading posts, pacified the Indians, and ever freely gave assistance to those who followed them into the Eldorado of the Arctic. And yet the prospectors and placer miners of Alaska, like those of California, Colorado, and the placer-mining territories of the West, are migratory. Of what earthly use would a "prospector" be who is not? With his pack on his back he trudges into the wilderness, along the old Indian trail, off up some unmapped river, facing the rigors of the climate, the dangers of mountain and stream, bravely meeting the hardships of a lonely life, ever seeking the golden pay streak which nature has so cunningly hidden in the gravel beds in the most out-of-the-way and unexpected places.

Migratory? Certainly; he travels from stream to stream, digging shafts and scraping the rim in search of colors. Disappointed for ninety-nine times, often in the hundredth hole he finds the colors, which bring a stampede of his kind from less-favored localities, and in a day a new camp is "struck," a town is built, lines of transportation established, judges and officers appointed, banks and business houses established. Ten million dollars per annum in virgin gold is gathered from the gravels and put into the general wealth of the Nation, all because the prospector and placer miner is "migratory."

This "migratory" character of the Alaskan prospector and placer miner is a strong, manly virtue. It is one of the foundation stones upon which the States of the West were built. That "migratory" character has found and extracted more than $200,000,000 in virgin gold from the gravels of Alaska, and no man was made poorer thereby. These "migratory" prospectors and placer miners of the great West have added more to the real wealth of our Nation, to its prosperity, happiness, and development, than all the banks and Wall Streets in New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago. They are known, appreciated, and honored in the great West, where they laid the foundations of government and built great cities and greater States.

It is a matter of profound surprise that men intrusted with the duty of government are so unacquainted with the true worth of the nation builders of the West as to class the prospector or the placer miner as a "migratory" undesirable.

If by the objection that our prospectors and placer miners are "migratory" it is sought to show that the population of Alaska is not permanent within the Territory, it is equally wanting a basis of fact, as may readily be seen from the following table, showing the date of settlement and present population of 30 Alaskan towns:

In further answer to the charge that our people are "migratory" as a class, I now call your attention to the increase in population in incorporated towns in Alaska and in unincorporated towns and communities to show that in 10 years there has been no loss in the population, no shifting, but a steady growth.

In the 22 unincorporated town communities there was an actual increase in each and a total increase in the whole 22 of 8,107, making a total increase in these 34 communities of 18,363. These exact figures, drawn from the census bulletin, "Population: Alaska, 1910," disprove the charge that our people in these 34 communities are "migratory" in any general sense.

Population is quite as permanent in Alaska as elsewhere, for Sitka was the capital of Alaska before Astoria was founded. Unalaska, Kodiak, and Sitka were established and permanent towns and marts of international trade before Jefferson purchased Louisiana. These towns and St. Michael, Wrangell, and a dozen more were established trading centers before California was acquired and the great cities of the Pacific coast were founded. The first churches and schools on that coast north of Mexico were established in Alaska, and some of those early establishments yet modestly continue their labors. Alaska has been under the complete dominion of civilization longer than any State or Territory west of the Mississippi River and north of California. No Indian war or any other war ever reddened her soil with blood, and her Indian, Russian, and American peoples have always lived together in peace and friendship.

In his official report to the Secretary of the Interior for 1910, the governor of Alaska said:

> The people continue their interest and pride in the public schools, and they have been administered with gratifying results during the past year. Schools in the incorporated towns are supported largely by the license moneys collected within the towns and are under the control of the school boards and town councils.

Public schools for white children are maintained in 31 towns in Alaska, and the attendance during the last year was between 1,500 and 2,000. The governor's report for 1910 says of schools for the education of natives:

> The Government schools for the education of natives continue under the charge of the Bureau of Education, which during the last year has increased the number of its schools from 62 to 69. The number of pupils has increased from 3,067 during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, to 3,725 in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1909, an increase of 21 per cent.

And for the year 1911 the Bureau of Education says of the Alaskan schools for native children:

> During the fiscal year 1911 this bureau maintained 81 public schools for natives, with an enrollment of 3,841 pupils and an average attendance of 1,689.

Alaska now has more school children in actual attendance in public schools within her borders than Mississippi, Indiana, Michigan, or Dakota had white settlers when they were each organized into a Territory and given an elective legislative assembly.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. I would like to ask the gentleman what he has to say about the permanency of the population of Alaska. It seems to me that is an important subject for the committee to consider in connection with the authorization of a legislature.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is important, and I call the gentleman's attention to the table giving the statistics of population in Alaska.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is the population of Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. By the last census, 64,356.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is the population as compared with 10 years ago and 5 years ago?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Ten years ago the population, according to the census, was 63,592.

Between 1900 and 1910 there was a decrease in the number of Indians in Alaska of 4,205 and a decrease in Chinese of 1,907. There was an increase in the white population of Alaska of 5,854. The population of Alaska in 1880 was 35,612, of which 6 per cent only were white people. The white population in 1890 had increased to 19 per cent, and in 1900 the white population had increased to 48 per cent, while in 1910 the white population is more than 56 per cent of the total.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is not decreasing?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; the white population is increasing, as shown by every census.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, what I wanted more to hear was something from the gentleman's own experience, as to whether these people really live there permanently, or whether there are about that many transient people in Alaska most of the time—what per cent of the 64,356 people in Alaska can be considered permanent residents?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that that is one of the vital questions at issue in this discussion, and the gentleman from Alaska will come to it in the course of his remarks.

Mr. JACKSON. I thought from what the gentleman from Alaska had said that he was about to conclude his remarks. I wanted to call his attention to that because I know he is qualified to speak on it, and I wanted to hear what he had to say.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Alaska yield for a moment?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] as to the increase of population during the last decade, I will ask the gentleman from Alaska if it is not a fact that the Census Bureau admits that the population, as reported in 1900, was greater than the actual population?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; a note added to Census Bulletin, population Alaska, expressly says that the enumeration at Nome in 1900 "includes persons on vessels in port, census having been taken during rush to the gold fields."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There was a large number of people on the shore and in boats at Nome who were counted in the population, who were only there temporarily; and if these were taken from the census of 1900, it would be seen that the white population of Alaska increased about 10,000 during the past decade.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. In 1900, when the census was taken of the people in the region of Nome, all of those on the beach, more than 12,000 in number, including those on the vessels in the roadstead opposite Nome, of whom there were five or six thousand, were included in the census. Those people on the beach during the decade from 1900 to 1910 scattered through the country, but those who were on ships as crews departed with their vessels, and we lost that much of the enumeration charged against us in 1900.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say to the gentleman that my purpose in asking those questions as to the population was to learn whether or not conditions in Alaska were such as they have been in nearly all the mining camps of which I have had any knowledge—that is, a large population during the period of great development and production in the mines and a decreasing population when the placer and other mines were worked out. That was the reason I asked the question, because I had read somewhere that the white population had actually decreased because of the exhaustion of the placer mines.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not at all. The population in the placer regions in Alaska is similar to the population you find in other placer regions in the West, and yet it is permanent and increasing.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. GOODWIN or Arkansas. While discussing the question of the population of Alaska, will the gentleman tell the committee if he knows what the percentage of population of bona fide people is and the percentage of the exploiters of wealth of that great country?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The exploiters of the wealth of Alaska do not live in Alaska at all. They generally live around 45 Broadway, New York. The population of Alaska is permanent, and I say again they are the same character and class of people that settled California. They are the same character of people who went to California in 1849 to mine; they are the same character of people who one year later erected the noble superstructure of the State of California. They are the same kind of people that built Virginia City, Butte, Helena, Anaconda, Spokane, and all the cities of the West that have been so largely built upon the mineral resources of that great country. They were a permanent population in that country as they are in Alaska. Unalaska and Kadiak and more of Alaska towns that are now thriving little cities were settled before Jefferson purchased the Louisiana territory, and from the time of their settlement, a century ago, down to this time we have had a permanent white population in the Territory of Alaska.

In many of our Alaska towns, such as Nome, Fairbanks, Valdez, Cordova, Juneau, Skagway, and Ketchikan, we have electric lights, telephones, telegraph lines, city water and power, automobiles, and in all are schools, churches, hospitals, libraries, and everything which advances good government and the home. My home is at Fairbanks, a beautiful little city in the beautiful Tanana Valley. We have all the aids to civilization, including a railroad to the mines.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. How many miles of railway are there?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. We have 44 miles at Fairbanks, way in the interior of Alaska, running out to our mines, and altogether we have in Alaska about 500 miles of railway.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is it all standard gauge?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; the 44 miles at Fairbanks is not standard gauge, it is a narrow-gauge railroad. Now, the population of Alaska is increasing. It is a mining population, it is true, but all of these cities on the southern coast where we have great quartz mines have increased in population in the last 10 years, and the whole of the development in the interior country, in the Tanana Valley, has grown up in that time.

Mr. TILSON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Before the gentleman passes from the subject of population I want to ask the gentleman if there is any provision in the bill as to the number of population in each district that is to send so many delegates or representatives to the assembly?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; I will say again that they are apportioned according to these four judicial divisions, which have a very equal population, as you may discover from the figures.

Mr. TILSON. At present these judicial divisions are substantially equal. Now, is there any provision for the future in case one of those divisions should increase very rapidly in population and another stand still?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; there is not, but there is no likelihood of anything of that kind happening, and if it does happen we can come back to the fountain head again and get some more legislation. This bill is not the end of the law, it is only the beginning of the building up of a government in Alaska.

Mr. TILSON. Then in each judicial district the representatives are chosen at large, are they?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. They are chosen at large.

Mr. TILSON. And also the members of the senate?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; members of both houses are chosen at large in each of these four judicial divisions.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. RAKER. In regard to the city of Fairbanks, how old a city is that?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It was established 10 years ago.

Mr. RAKER. And its population now?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. In the incorporated town 3,541, but in the community there are more than 7,500.

Mr. RAKER. You have all modern buildings and improvements in that city?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; we have two large hospitals, a high school, common schools, and more children in the schools this winter than ever before; we have churches, railroads, telephones, telegraph lines, automobiles—everything that goes to make up civilization in a good community.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman permit one more question?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Under your bill who are permitted to vote and what will be the qualifications as you understand?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The qualifications are fixed by the act of 1906 providing for the election of Delegates to Congress.

Mr. RAKER. What is that, in short?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That the elector shall have resided for 2 years in the Territory and 30 days in the precinct in which he offers to vote.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You have universal manhood suffrage?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; certainly.

Mr. AYRES. What, if any, agricultural production is there in Alaska, and if so, has it increased?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The agricultural capacity of Alaska is large, surprisingly so to those who have never considered it. I will call the attention of gentlemen particularly to this photograph of one of our farmers plowing in the Tanana Valley on October 24 last, which illustrates not only the fact but the width and character of the valley. The Tanana Valley at this point [illustrating] is 50 miles wide and 200 miles long, and our agricultural department has made a careful examination into the area of arable land there and has announced that there is more agricultural land in that one valley than there is agricultural land under cultivation in Norway, Sweden, Finland, and the three northern Provinces of Russia. Permit me to call your attention to an official statement from the Alaska agricultural bureau on that question.

AGRICULTURE IN NORTHERN EUROPE COMPARED WITH ALASKA.

In order to further establish the possibility of agriculture in Alaska a comparison has been made of the countries of Norway, Sweden, Finland, and the Russian Provinces of Archangel, Vologda, and Olonetz. All these countries lie between latitudes 58° and 70° north, and for the most part they are north of 60°, the approximate latitude of the northern reach of the Gulf of Alaska. In Europe within the above limits are embraced over 985,000 square miles, or about 599,450,000 acres. Alaska, with its 570,390 square miles, or 365,049,000 acres, extends from latitude 54° 30′ in southeastern Alaska to more than 71° at Point Barrow. A study of the topography, climate, native plants, and so forth, shows that the conditions are not very dissimilar in the two regions, whatever advantage there is in climate being probably slightly in favor of the European countries. In these countries of Europe more than 11,000,000 people are living, while the census of 1910 reports 64,356 as the population of Alaska. Recent statistics show in the three countries and three Provinces in Europe which lie mostly north of 60° that 8,373,000 acres of land were producing cereals of all kinds, the total yield being: Wheat, 6,683,840 bushels; rye, 36,509,640 bushels; barley, 26,963,545 bushels; oats, 109,036,780 bushels. In addition potatoes to the amount of 100,321,190 bushels and 7,871,119 tons of hay were reported. Live stock are returned for these countries as follows: Horses, 1,516,251; cattle, 6,110,476; sheep, 4,033,578; hogs, 1,484,124; goats 368,021; and reindeer, 564,732.

The area reported under cultivation varies from less than 0.01 per cent in Archangel and 0.5 per cent in Norway to 4.1 per cent in Sweden. In Finland, Vologda, and Olonetz only about 1 per cent of the total area is in cultivation, as the term is commonly used. In nearly every country there are natural meadows of large extent used as pasture and for haymaking, so that the total under agricultural use is probably about double the figures quoted above. On a basis of 1 per cent of the total area available for crops and 2 per cent for crops, pasture, and haying, there should be over 3,650,000 acres capabale of cultivation, or 7,300,000 acres available for possible agricultural development in Alaska. In 1894 the Director of the United States Geological Survey, in a letter to the House Committee on Agriculture, estimated the area of tillable land in southeastern Alaska, in the Cook Inlet country, the Alaskan Peninsula, and adjacent islands at from 3,000 to 5,000 square miles, or 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 acres. In 1900, after traveling repeatedly throughout Alaska and comparing estimates from various sources, Prof. C. C. Georgeson estimated the tillable and pasture land of Alaska at 100,000 square miles, or 64,000,000 acres. In 1910, Mr. J. W. Neal, who is in charge of the agricultural experiment station near Fairbanks, made a reconnoissance survey of the Tanana Valley, and he estimated the agricultural and grazing lands of that valley and the small valleys leading from it as about 15,000 square miles, or 9,700,000 acres, or more than the total area reported under crops in the specified countries of Europe.

With the same development of agriculture in Alaska as in Europe to supplement its mining, fisheries, and other industries, Alaska should support a population almost equal to that of Europe north of 60° latitude and a commerce of equal or greater importance.

Mr. RAKER. Right there let me ask the gentleman what is the character of the crops which can be produced there and which have been produced up to the present time?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. All of the crops which can be raised in Norway, Sweden, Finland, and the northern provinces of Russia—potatoes, root crops, barley, oats, gardens, carrots, beets, turnips, celery—general crops of that kind.

Mr. RAKER. And wheat?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Our people are miners and have not engaged in raising wheat. But there are fields of oats; and it is a valuable agricultural district.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Can you tell the kind of timber you have there?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. We have spruce timber of a very fine variety. Here is a photograph of one of our Fairbanks sawmills, showing the big logs, which will represent exactly what we have. We have five sawmills in Fairbanks.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman made a suggestion in reference to the agricultural possibilities of Alaska that is very interesting and, I hope, is entirely correct. But let me ask the gentleman, is there not a marked difference between the climate of Alaska and that of Norway, for example—in a large part of Norway, at least, where agriculture is carried on?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; there is.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it not much colder in Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is somewhat, probably. But it is cold in December and January, and we do not have any crops in the ground then, and it does not make any difference to the crops we are going to put in next summer whether it is a few degrees colder in December and January or not.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is not true in the western part of Scandinavia. Is it possible to raise crops in that territory with a limited season such as you must have and with your ground frozen to such depth during the winter?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, there is no doubt of our ability to raise crops in that region. We raise oats, potatoes, barley, and, as I say to you, all of the root crops, and everything of that kind, and the Agricultural Department thinks we are going to be able to raise wheat there without any difficulty.

Now, there is a very serious misapprehension in respect to the climate of Alaska. I want to call the attention of the House to this chart. On the 22d day of December we have 2 hours of sunshine at Fairbanks, in Alaska; on the 22d day of March we have 12 hours sunshine and 12 hours darkness; on the 22d day of June we have 22 hours of sunshine and but 2 hours when the sun is beneath the horizon in the north; on September 22 the sun has so far receded that we have 12 hours of sunshine and 12 hours of darkness. Again, on the 22d of December it has gone back to its southern limit and we have only 2 hours of sunshine. We have more sunshine in the Tanana Valley between the 22d day of March and the 22d day of September than California has in the same time. We have more sunshine in the Tanana Valley in that season than any other spot in United States territory.

Mr. RAKER. It is not any purpose of the gentleman in discussing the bill to attack the California climate, is it? [Laughter.]

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not at all. I think it is the finest climate in the world, except that in the Tanana Valley. But I call the committee's attention now to this chart, which shows the exact situation in respect to sunshine and shadow in that great valley. A similar condition accounts for the sunshine and crops that are raised in the northern part of Europe and Asia on the same latitude. The temperature in the summer time is moderate. It gets up to 90 degrees sometimes, and when it gets to 90 degrees and the mosquitoes get after you you think it is 120 in the shade, for we have more mosquitoes in the central part of Alaska than New Jersey can produce. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. May I ask the gentleman one more question, please?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I asked you a few moments ago about the timber, and you kindly said you had spruce, but somebody interrupted you. I would like to ask you if that is all the timber you have there?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The timber in the interior is very largely spruce timber, but on the coast cedar, spruce, and other forests grow.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. One other question. You spoke a moment ago about raising oats and potatoes. I would like to ascertain the average crop of oats and potatoes which you raise there—how many bushels to the acre—if you could tell me?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. In answer to this inquiry I will read a letter from a Fairbanks farmer who gives exact figures of what he actually raised and the price received for it:

FAIRBANKS, ALASKA, November 8, 1909.

Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM,
Delegate to Congress, Fairbanks, Alaska.

MY DEAR JUDGE: In answer to your suggestion that I write you a letter about my farming operations, I take pleasure in doing so. When you and Mr. Joslin and Mr Birch and Mr. White were at my place last fall I had not begun to take in my crops, but since then I have done so. I had 3 acres of potatoes, and they yielded me 18 tons; and the market price was $120 per ton, for which I sold most of them. I had 1 acre of beets, on which I had a crop of 8 tons; 2 acres of carrots, which yielded me 7½ tons, with a market price of $140 per ton; 1 acre of turnips, from which I gathered 200 sacks of 80 pounds to the sack, or 8 tons, at $80 per ton. I had 2½ tons of rutabagas upon one-fourth of an acre of ground, for which the market price was $100 per ton. I had 1 ton of red beets on one-quarter of an acre of ground, at $140 per ton. I had 15 acres of barley which I cut and sold for hay. I had 3½ tons which I sold for $75 per ton, and still have enough left to fill my barn chock-full for my own use for the winter. I raised 2 tons of cabbages which I put away for the winter, besides which I sold between 3½ and 4 tons during the summer at an average selling price of $140 per ton.

I raised 29 sucking pigs; also 13 pigs which weighed about 100 pounds each, and 23 big hogs. I sold 5 of my hogs to the butcher for $60 each.

This fall I put in 6 acres of winter wheat, bluestem, which I sowed the second week in August, and before the snow came in October the wheat was up 2 or 3 inches high, and I never saw a better stand of wheat anywhere. I have raised good winter wheat, barley, and oats, and all kinds of vegetables, and, in my judgment as a farmer of more than 30 years' experience, the Tanana Valley is a first-class agricultural country.

My farm is near the river and is perfectly level. The soil is a sandy loam and is very rich, made up of sediment and silt and sand brought down by the river in ages gone by. The Tanana Valley opposite my farm is 60 miles wide, and there are probably 5,000,000 acres of as good ground as mine in this vicinity. I know from six years' experience on this farm that farming can be made entirely successful, and that this valley can be made to produce everything which can be raised in Minnesota and the Dakotas, and that there is no valley in the North so wide and rich and variable for agricultural purposes as the Tanana Valley.

I have several neighbors immediately around the town of Fairbanks who are engaged in successful farming, and we have in the last year raised almost enough to supply the local market, and there is no question hereafter that the whole local market in the Tanana mines can be supplied from our farms and gardens.

Respectfully, WM. YOUNG.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is any corn or wheat raised there?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No. I think we can raise the hardy varieties of wheat, but not corn.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Who is doing this farming, may I ask the gentleman? I see 36,000 people are classified as whites and 25,000 are classified as Indians. I presume those that are classified as Indians are natives of that country?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; they are.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are those the people who are doing the farming, or is it the white people?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The white people are doing the farming.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Of what nationality does the gentleman consider the Indians? They are classified as Indians. Are they not, as a matter of fact, Asiatics of some kind?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have no doubt of that. I have a very pronounced theory on that subject.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that ethnologically speaking, the department here recognizes only the Aleuts and the Metlakahtlas as Indians in that country?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not think so. I think they are all recognized as Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Eskimos are not recognized as Indians, are they?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. They are Indians, whether they are recognized as such or not. They are all of the Mongolian type.

"UNEQUAL DISTRIBUTION" OF POPULATION.

The next charge against us is that there is an "unequal distribution" of our population. In the bill now before the House the apportionment for members for both houses of the Alaska legislature is based upon the population in each of the four judicial divisions into which Alaska is now divided by law for judicial purposes. There is no such "unequal distribution" of population in those four judicial divisions as to prevent the four district courts therein from carrying on the public business with satisfaction. The United States land offices are also limited to those four divisions, and in all the business affairs of the Territory those four divisions are the satisfactory boundaries. Nor is there any "unequal distribution," for the population, according to the census of 1910, is divided as follows:

Population for 1910 of Alaska by judicial divisions.

First judicial division	15,216
Second judicial division	12,351
Third judicial division	20,078
Fourth judicial division	16,711
Total	64,356

With 15,216 inhabitants in the first division, 12,351 in the second, 20,078 in the third, and 16,711 in the fourth, the exact census figures disprove the assertion that there is an unequal distribution of population in the different divisions in Alaska.

The voting population also shows not only that our people are quite equally distributed, but that there is a widespread unity of political thought and purpose among them. With but two slight exceptions each successful candidate for Delegate from Alaska to Congress in 1906, 1908, and 1910 carried not only his own but every district in Alaska. An inspection of the following table showing the vote of each candidate in each district at each election shows that there was a fair rivalry and a fair division of the vote. This table also shows that at each election there were more votes cast in Alaska than were cast in each of more than a dozen congressional districts in the United States for Members of Congress now sitting in this House.

Not only does the census of 1910 and the election returns show that the population in these four judicial—and now proposed representative—districts is fairly equal in number, but the customs statistics also show how nearly equal the imports of merchandise purchased from the merchants of the United States is in the four divisions. The following figures are compiled from the customs report of 1911, just published:

Distribution of domestic merchandise shipped from the United States to Alaska, 1907–1911.

Imports.	Fiscal year ended June 30—

Total	17,811,093	15,957,576	17,186,445	17,972,647	15,736,510

Then, too, the wealth created in and exported from each of these four divisions to the United States is as nearly equal as the population and the distribution of the imports. The following table shows how equally the wealth originating in Alaska in 1911 was divided between them. The table holds good, approximately, for the preceding years for a decade:

Value and distribution of specified exports from Alaska, 1911.

Division.	Products.	Value.	Total.
1. Juneau, southeast Alaska	Gold	$4,250,000	$12,929,712
	Fish and furs	8,464,227
	Marble—gypsum	215,485
2. Nome, west Alaska	Gold	3,125,000	8,253,234
	Fish and furs	5,128,234
3. Valdez, central Alaska	Gold	475,000	6,634,443
	Fish and furs	3,260,558
	Copper	2,898,885
4. Fairbanks, interior Alaska	Gold	9,300,000	9,300,000
Total specified exports, Alaska, 1911			37,117,389

The small amount of exports from the third division, of which Valdez is the center, which includes the 200 miles of the completed Copper River & Northwestern and the 71 miles of the Alaska Northern Railroads, and the celebrated Matanuska and Bering River coal fields, has resulted from the neglect of the Government to open these coal fields to development.

And, then, too, the coal fields of Alaska are widely and fairly divided—the Bering and Matanuska fields lie in the Valdez division, the Cape Lisburne anthracite and Seward Peninsula coal fields are in the Nome division, while the great deposits on the south side of the Tanana Valley, within 50 miles of Fairbanks, and the greater beds on the Arctic slope lie in the Fairbanks division. No State or Territory in the country has a more equal division of population and trade imports and exports, or a more equal division of great undeveloped natural resources, within districts created for legislative apportionment, than the Territory of Alaska has under this bill. These four apportionment divisions, provided by this bill, having such equal population, trade, and resources, have also the same boundaries as the four judicial and land-office districts created by Congress in Alaska, and thus possess every element of equality and fixed business relations to commend them to the public and to Congress.

SMALL POPULATION—LARGE TERRITORY.

The third and last Executive objection to the creation of an elective, rather than an appointive, legislative body for Alaska is that the "smallness in number" of the population "in relation to the enormous expanse of the territory" makes it altogether impracticable to give Alaska such an elective body. Of course, the Territory would be just as large and the population just as small if the legislature were appointive as recommended by the President, instead of elective as provided by the bill before the House. But is the population too small in relation to the area of the Territory to justify Congress to refuse to create an elective territorial legislature for Alaska? This inquiry can only be answered fairly by comparing these items with conditions of a like character which formerly existed in other Territories.

The total area of Alaska is 590,884 square miles. The total population, according to exact census figures, is shown in the following table, which also shows the relative increase or decrease in the different classes of the population for the years 1900 and 1910.

Population of Alaska, 1900–1910.

Class.	1900	1910	Decrease.	Increase.

All other		347		347

[1] Includes persons of mixed parentage; that is, of native Indian and Russian or other parentage, as follows: 1900, 2,497; 1910, 3,887.

Those Russians who remained in Alaska after 1867 became citizens of the United States under the third article of the treaty of cession, which provided:

ART 3. The inhabitants of the ceded territory, according to their choice, reserving their natural allegiance, may return to Russia within three years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory they, with the exception of uncivilized native tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Add, then, to the total of white persons given in the census of 1910, 36,347, the number of those persons of mixed parentage—that is, of native Indian and Russian parentage—3,887, and it gives the true total of American citizens and whites in the Territory as 40,234.

Even according to the exact census figures it will be noticed in the decade from 1900 to 1910 there was an increase in the white population of Alaska of 5,844. At the same time there was a decrease in the Indian population of 4,205 and in the Chinese of 1,907. These items ought to be considered when scanning the character of the people who are to support the burden of developing Alaska and maintaining a legislature therein—the white population is increasing and the Indian and oriental elements are decreasing.

The increase of the white population in Alaska is better shown by the following table, giving the percentage of that increase in proportion to the whole population for four decades:

Per cent of increase in white population in Alaska.

	1880	1890	1900	1910
Total	33,426	32,052	63,592	64,356
White	2,186	6,121	30,493	36,347
Per cent white	6.5	19.1	48	56.5

The total number, then, of American citizens and whites in Alaska, according to the census of 1910, was 40,234, and the total area 590,884 square miles.

What historical basis is there for asserting that 40,000 white American citizens is too small a population to intrust with elective territorial legislative power, even in so large a Territory as Alaska? Compare Alaska's population and area, her known resources, development, and advancement, with those of many of the earlier Territories when first they were intrusted with legislative power, and it will be readily discovered that the advantage upon every point is decidedly with Alaska. No Territory was ever organized by the United States which had at its birth the development, resources, population, schools, churches, and general advancement that Alaska now has. Many States had less when given a constitution and a place in the Union, with two United States Senators and a Member of Congress. Comparisons in some respects are shown by the following table:

[1] Less than 5,000.

Alaska now has 109 persons to each 1,000 square miles of territory. When the territory of the United States northwest of the Ohio River was organized under the ordinance of 1787 and provided with an elective Territorial legislature, "so soon as there shall be 5,000 free male inhabitants of full age in the district," it had less than 18 persons therein to each 1,000 square miles of its territory, or more than 55 square miles to each inhabitant. Congress has organized eight Territories with an elective legislative body, each having less than 50 persons to the 1,000 square miles—less than one-half the average density of Alaska's population. Alaska now has more than 13 times the population which Michigan or Dakota had, more than 11 times the population that Indiana had, more than 10 times the population that Minnesota had, more than 9 times the population Nevada had, more than 7 times the population Mississippi or Wyoming had, more than 6 times the population that Arizona had, more than 5 times the population that Illinois, Oregon, Utah, Washington, or Idaho had, and more than double the population that Missouri or Wisconsin had when each of those Territories was organized and provided with an elective Territorial legislature by the Congress of the United States. The character of the population in all those Territories was similar to that in Alaska—hard-working, honest pioneers, who went upon the western frontier to better their fortunes and to aid in building an American Commonwealth. Some question was made the other day whether the figures showing the population in these early Territories included Indians. I have ascertained from the Statistical Abstract published by the Bureau of Statistics that those figures do include the Indians in these earlier Territories just as in Alaska——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not mean that the population in Missouri included all the Indians in the Northwest at that time; no census had ever been made of Indians at that time.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; that is probably an exception, though the Statistical Abstract does not make the exception.

Mr. MANN. How could it be included in the census figures?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Here is the Statistical Abstract for 1910, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to pages 36, 37, and 38 of that document. On page 36 is this head and statement:

No. 19.—Population at each census, 1790 to 1910: By color, by States and Territories, and by geographical divisions. "White" includes Chinese, Japanese, and Indians; "Colored" includes only those of African descent. From reports of the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. MANN. But the Government did not make a census of those Indians at that time, and did not pretend to.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not know anything about it except what the Abstract says. That may be true of Missouri—probably was. I think probably to that extent the gentleman from Illinois is right and that the Abstract is wrong, but in all others I think the Abstract is right.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, that represents all the Indians which they counted in the census, and certain Indians may have been counted. The bulk of the Indians which were in tribal relations were not counted.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Nor is Alaska's population relatively small when compared with that of several States when they were admited into the Union, permitted to adopt a State constitution, and to organize a State legislature with powers limited only by the Constitution of the United States, and to elect two United States Senators and Members in the House of Representatives.

Alaska compared with States.

	Organization census.
Delaware	1776	1790	59,096
Rhode Island	1776	1790	68,825
Ohio	1802	1800	45,365
Illinois	1818	1820	55,162
Missouri	1820	1820	66,557
Florida	1838	1840	54,477
Oregon	1857	1860	52,465
Nevada	1864	1870	42,491
Wyoming	1889	1890	60,705
Alaska		1910	64,356

Alaska now has a larger population than 16 Territories had when they were given an elective territorial legislature and a larger population than 9 States when they were organized and given sovereign constitutional control over legislation within their borders. Notice, too, that as early as 1790 and as late as 1890 States in the Union had less population than Alaska now has.

The great area of Alaska is also raised as a bar to her prayer for the organization of an elective territorial legislature.

But, again, a comparison of Alaska's area with that of earlier organized Territories shows that Alaska is smaller than the upper Louisiana Territory when it was organized in 1805 and smaller than Missouri when, in 1812, it was organized as the Territory of Missouri. Compare the area of Alaska and that of the following Territories at the date of their legislative organization:

	Square miles.
Northwest Ohio River	266,000
New Mexico Territory	266,503
Indiana Territory	268,474
Wisconsin Territory	283,137
Oregon Territory	297,552
Dakota Territory	318,005
Idaho Territory	333,283
Nebraska Territory	360,512
Michigan Territory	387,988
Alaska Territory	590,884
Missouri Territory	861,608

Missouri was more than 270,000 square miles larger than Alaska now is when it was organized and given an elective Territorial legislature in 1812–1816. In 1819 the Territory of Arkansas was carved out of the lower part of the Territory of Missouri, and Missouri Territory had remaining 747,758 square miles, or more than 156,000 square miles more than Alaska; in 1821 the State of Missouri was created; still the Territory contained 678,343 square miles, or more than 87,000 square miles more than Alaska. It remained larger than Alaska until, in 1834, the Territory of Michigan was created, with 371,997 square miles, and embracing a part of the old Missouri territory. A careful examination of the historical data proves that the great area of these Territories was not, and was not even considered to be, a sufficient or any reason for refusing them an organized Territorial government with an elective legislature, but was rather thought to be a sound reason for sharing the burden with those hardy pioneers who were willing to assume it.

The Delegate from Alaska in his Washington office has daily telegraphic communication with all parts of that Territory. It took a season's journey by stagecoach and canoe for the representative from Michigan Territory to secure such information in 1805; in 1848, when Oregon was made a Territory, her Delegate came to Washington by the Isthmus of Panama, and he had communication with his constituents only once a year. Nome, Fairbanks, and Juneau, in the Territory of Alaska, are nearer Washington to-day than Portland, Seattle, and Boise were 30 years ago.

INCREASED FINANCIAL BURDENS.

There is another class of objections to the passage of the bill now before the House which is based upon the assumption that if Congress shall, in its discretion and for good cause, create an elective legislature in Alaska it will thereafter refuse to exercise its constitutional duty under section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution, which declares:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.

Many objections upon this score are made by the governor of Alaska in his recent report to the Secretary of the Interior and in his testimony before the various committees of Congress. He assumes that if Congress shall create an elective legislative body for Alaska it will therefore necessarily withhold many appropriations which it now makes for public uses there and thereby put such burdens upon its people that their government could not exist. For instance, he says:

> A territorial legislature being installed and a separate territorial treasury being established, if the National Government should decide to leave the care and education of the native people to the local legislature, the present appropriations for schools, reindeer, suppression of liquor traffic, and relief of destitution and medical relief would either have to be abandoned or supplied by the territorial treasury. These appropriations now amount to $224,000 per annum.

Of course, that result would follow "if the National Government should decide to leave the care and education of the native people to the local legislature." Notice the assumptions: First, that "a separate territorial treasury being established," when there is nothing in the bill about it; and, second, that if a separate territorial treasury is established, "if the National Government should decide to leave the care and education of the native people to the local legislature," when there is no such provision in the bill and no precedent in more than a hundred years' legislation to justify the assumption. Congress never did put the burden upon a Territory, having an elective legislature or not, to care for and educate the Indian tribes within its borders.

And, again, he says in his report:

> It is reasonable to be expected that under an organized territorial government, Alaska being treated like all the other Territories, the Federal Government would cease to make appropriations for roads, the protection of game, for the care of the insane and prisoners.

And, again, he overlooks the fact that it is the duty of Congress under section 8 of Article I of the Constitution "to establish post offices and post roads" and "to regulate commerce."

Certainly there is nothing in the bill now before the House which commits Congress to the policy of refusing "to make appropriations for roads, the protection of game, for the care of the insane and prisoners" in Alaska; nor is there a historical precedent to support the threat that Congress will adopt such an unfriendly policy—but quite to the contrary.

It is also declared that if Alaska shall be given an elective territorial legislature, Congress "would cease to make appropriations for the protection of game" in that Territory. Whether there would also be a refusal by Congress to continue to make appropriations to conserve the game resources and wild life in Alaska if Congress should pass an act to create an appointive legislative commission, as recommended by the President, we are not informed.

The fact is that Congress has long since established the national policy of protecting wild animals and birds in the States and Territories, and that without regard to whether the States or Territories have elective legislative assemblies or not. A brief examination of national legislation will disclose the policy which Congress has adopted.

On May 25, 1900, Congress passed "An act to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, prohibit the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes." Section 3 of that act extends its provisions to transportation of game "frome one State or Territory to another State or Territory, or from the Distict of Columbia or Alaska to any State or Territory, or from any State or Territory to the District of Columbia or Alaska," with adequate provisions for its enforcement. Congress has established laws for the protection of game in the District of Columbia, and appropriations are annually made for their enforcement. National game preserves have been established in the various States and Territories, and reservations of the public lands have been made for breeding grounds. Annual appropriations are made to cover the support and enforcement of these national game laws in all States and Territories, including Alaska. A national game preserve has been established in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, in the Wichita forest reserve, in Oklahoma, and bird reserves on many islands in the Gulf of Mexico and on the different coasts of the country, including Alaska. All forestry reservations in the States and Territories have been made game preserves by the acts of Congress, and all forestry officers are specially required to enforce the game laws therein. The forest reservations in Alaska embrace an area greater than the State of Ohio. Will the Government abandon them or permit the slaughter of all game and birds therein because the people there are given an elective legislature? It is an unwarranted assumption.

What authority, then, is there for the governor of Alaska to declare that if Congress shall, in its judgment, create an elective legislature in Alaska it will necessarily abandon its general policy of conserving the wild birds and animals in that Territory? Of course his assertion is without basis in fact or precedent and he has no authority to make it. It is much more likely that the United States will continue its national efforts in all the States and Territories to conserve wild bird and animal life. Alaska being the great breeding ground, the nesting place, of most migratory birds from the United States, there need be no fear that it will discontinue its small appropriations in line with the national policy merely because the Territory is being developed by the hardy men of the north, who humbly petition Congress to aid them in that work by creating there the usual form of an American legislative body to be elected by the people. The development of the Territory in population, trade, and government will not in any respect interfere with the conservation of birds and wild animals or with the national policy in that respect.

Will Congress withdraw its appropriations for the support of prisoners and insane persons if it shall create an elective legislative body in Alaska? This inquiry, like others of its kind, can be authoritatively answered only by each Congress. Of course, Congress could withdraw all appropriations from Alaska for these and all other purposes; but would it, merely because it saw fit to aid in the development of a new Territory by creating there an elective Territorial legislature?

The only answer which can be made to this argument is to observe the policy pursued by Congress in other Territories.

Section 1936 of the United States Revised Statutes, 1878, provided that:

> SEC. 1936. The care and custody of the penitentiaries in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, and Colorado, and the personal property thereunto belonging, and the use and occupation thereof, are transferred to such Territories, respectively, until otherwise ordered by the Attorney General, but the legal title to such penitentiaries and the property shall continue to vest in the United States.

Section 1937 then provided that the United States would then pay $1 a day board for all United States prisoners confined in either of said penitentiaries. The United States by national appropriations built and maintained penitentiaries in those and all other organized Territories. When Dakota, Montana, and Washington were organized into the States of North and South Dakota, Montana, and Washington the penitentiaries belonging to the United States therein were conveyed to the States by the enabling act of February 22, 1889, which reads as follows:

SEC. 15. That so much of the lands belonging to the United States as have been acquired and set apart for the purpose mentioned in 'An act appropriating money for the erecting of a penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota," approved March 2, 1881, together with the buildings thereon, be, and the same is hereby, granted, together with any unexpended balances of the moneys appropriated therefor, by said act to said State of South Dakota for the purpose therein designated; and the States of North Dakota and Washington shall, respectively, have like grants for the same purpose and subject to the like terms and conditions as provided in said act of March 2, 1881, for the Territory of Dakota. The penitentiary at Deer Lodge City, Mont., and all lands connected therewith and set apart and reserved therefor are hereby granted to the State of Montana.

The same liberal policy has always been pursued by the United States in respect to the building of insane asylums in the Territories, and most extraordinarily liberal grants of lands have always been made in aid of the erection and maintenance of such institutions.

Every effort to develop the Territory of Alaska is objected to by some one who fears that his friends who have special interests there must pay a cent or two of taxes. In 1903, when the Senate subcommittee on Territories, consisting of Senators DILLINGHAM, NELSON, BURNHAM, and Patterson, visited Alaska and proposed to build wagon roads in that untracked wilderness, the same argument now made against home rule in Alaska was urged against the building of wagon roads in that Territory. The whole of the receipts and expenditures of the United States in Alaska for a year were arrayed, and it was assumed that Congress ought not to build wagon roads there, because the annual expenditures already exceeded the annual receipts from Alaska. But the subcommittee pointed out that the Government of the United States had a duty to perform in such cases quite apart from the amount which a Territory may or may not pay into the Treasury. Referring to the same array of figures as that offered by the governor of Alaska in opposition to the pending bill, the subcommittee of the Senate, in its report (No. 282, 58th Cong., 2d sess., Jan. 12, 1904), said:

It will be seen that every item of expense that can under any theory be charged in the debit and credit account against Alaska appears in the foregoing table of expenditures, and it will at once occur to everyone that if the Government of the United States were to assume the payment of such items as it assumes and pays in all Territories of the United States where a Territorial government has been established, the following items should not enter into the account, to wit:

Salaries, governor, etc	$51, 124. 43
Expenses of the United States courts	534, 000. 00
Expenses office United States marshal	2, 016. 72
Expenses of revenue vessels in Alaskan waters	115, 000. 00
Military, telegraph, and cable lines	384, 007. 20
Light and fog-signal stations	183, 485. 12
Supplies for native inhabitants	19, 586. 20
Miscellaneous	5, 940. 52
Total	1, 295, 160. 19

With these items thrown out, the legitimate charges which should be paid by the people of the district would appear to amount to only $138,506.22, or the difference between $1,443,666.41 and $1,295,160.19; and as the receipts by the Government are $468,017.04, a balance of $329,510.82 appears, which, in the opinion of the committee, should be devoted to internal improvements which will tend to develop that district.

It is a waste of time, however, to follow up and attempt to answer objections to the bill based, as these made by the governor of Alaska are, upon the mere assumption of the objector.

To assume that because Congress shall create an agency in Alaska to assist it in its constitutional duty to govern that Territory, it will therefore abandon both the agency and its duty and so conduct itself as to delay the performance of its constitutional trust, is to assume a position not justified by anything which Congress has ever done in the course of the development of any of our American Territories.

Having now very briefly considered the objections urged against the creation of any elective legislative assembly for Alaska, let us consider the body to which we are to fit the coat as to its present legislative and political status.

TREATY OF CESSION, MARCH 30, 1867.

By the third article of the treaty of cession it was agreed by the United States and Russia that:

ART. 3. The inhabitants of the ceded territory, according to their choice, reserving their natural allegiance, may return to Russia within three years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they, with the exception of uncivilized native tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion. The uncivilized tribes will be subject to such laws and regulations as the United States may from time to time adopt in regard to aboriginal tribes of that country.

Nothing has ever been done by the United States to keep its agreement in respect to those Russian subjects who chose to abandon their allegiance to their native country and continue to reside in Alaska. If affirmative action of Congress is necessary to admit them "to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States," they have not been admitted. They and their descendants live along the coast in the old Russian villages from Unalaska to Sitka, and have never been allowed to take land, or mines, or even to act as officers of ships or steamboats. Are they citizens of the United States? And if not, when will the United States keep its solemn treaty agreement to admit them to naturalization as such?

THE UNORGANIZED TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

From the date of cession, in 1867, to May 14, 1884, Alaska was an unorganized territory. The laws of the United States relating to customs, commerce, and navigation were extended over it by the act of Congress of July 27, 1868, but no attempt was made by Congress to establish either courts, executive officers, or a legislature.

A DECADE OF MILITARY RULE.

On Friday, October 18, 1867, the Russians hauled down their flag and Gen. Rosseau, escorted by a company of the Ninth United States Infantry, raised that of the United States. Alaska began a decade of military government which is described by the historian Bancroft in terms too humiliating to repeat. In 1877 the military was recalled to the States, and thereafter a revenue-cutter service became the government of Alaska until, in 1884, it was organized as a Territory under the act of Congress of that year.

ORGANIC ACT OF MAY 17, 1884.

The act of 1884, organizing the Territory of Alaska, was drawn by Benjamin Harrison, a Senator from Indiana. The first section of the act provided that "Alaska shall constitute a civil and judicial district, the government of which shall be organized and administered as hereinafter provided." The act then provided for the appointment of a governor, a district judge, clerk, marshal, district attorney, and other officers by the President of the United States; it extended the laws of Oregon to Alaska, created a land district, and provided for land officers. Under this act the President appointed a governor, judge, and other officers, and the Oregon laws were enforced as if enacted by a local legislature.

CRIMINAL CODE OF 1889.

In 1899 Congress passed a special criminal code for Alaska, based primarily upon the code of Oregon and other Western States. It is still in effect and generally satisfactory.

ADDITIONAL ORGANIC ACT AND CARTER'S CIVIL CODE, 1900.

The act of June 6, 1900, provided for a system of three district courts in Alaska, greatly extending the provisions of the organic act of 1884, and contained a complete civil code of laws. Carter's Alaska codes were prepared and published by Senator Carter, of Montana, in 1900, and embraced in one code the whole of the laws then in force in Alaska, including both the criminal code of 1899 and the civil code of 1900. As a local legislature Congress had thus done for Alaska what it had not done for any other Territory, except the District of Columbia, in the history of the Government—it enacted and provided a complete system of local laws.

Alaska now has a complete criminal code, a complete civil code, and a complete system of courts, with appeals to the United States circuit court of appeals, ninth circuit, and, in the cases provided for by law, appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States.

DELEGATE ACT OF MAY 7, 1906.

The act of Congress of May 7, 1906, provided for the election by the people of the Territory of Alaska of a Delegate from Alaska to the House of Representatives. Under that authority elections have been held in Alaska, and three Delegates have respectively heretofore been elected and occupied seats in Congress from that Territory.

DEPARTMENTS OF GOVERNMENT IN ALASKA.

The American system of government is divided into three general departments—the executive, the judicial, and the legislative. An executive department, consisting of a governor of the Territory and other executive officers, was provided by the organic act of 1884; the executive department is as completely organized in Alaska as in any other Territory.

A district court of general jurisdiction was established by the organic act of 1884; and by the act of June 6, 1900, the courts of the Territory were reorganized, increased in number, their jurisdiction greatly extended, and the judicial department became as effective as that department is in Arizona and New Mexico. Instead of creating a supreme court for the Territory, however, Congress provided that appeals from district courts shall go to the United States circuit court of appeals, thus providing a complete judicial department for Alaska.

Congress has not, however, created a legislative department in Alaska. Though it has provided for the election of a Delegate in Congress, Congress has continued to exercise all the functions and powers of a Territorial legislature of that Territory, a function which it has not exercised in any other similar instance in the history of our Government. Alaska now has in practical shape every department of government created for and granted to other Territories except a Territorial legislature—a department which is greatly needed in aid of her future development.

ALASKA IS A CUSTOMS-COLLECTING DISTRICT.

The treaty by which the United States acquired the cession of Alaska from Russia was proclaimed on June 20, 1867. On July 27, 1868, Congress passed "An act to extend the laws of the United States relating to customs, commerce, and navigation over the territory ceded to the United States by Russia, to establish a collection district therein, and for other purposes." (15 Stat. L., 240.) This act gave the district courts of the United States in California or Oregon and the district courts of Washington Territory jurisdiction over all violations of the laws therein extended to Alaska.

The real purpose, however, in passing the act of July 27, 1868, was to create the customs collection district of Alaska, which was done in section 2 thereof, in which it is provided:

That all of the said Territory * * * shall constitute a customs collection district, to be called the District of Alaska, for which said district a port of entry shall be established * * * at Sitka. When the revision of 1874 was enacted, section 2 of that act was both redrafted and reenacted into and became sections 2591 and 2592 of the United States Revised Statutes, 1878, and there read and appear as follows:

SEC. 2591. There shall be in the Territory of Alaska one collection district, as follows:
"The District of Alaska to comprise all the Territory of Alaska, in which Sitka shall be the port of entry."
SEC. 2592. There shall be in the collection district of Alaska a collector, who shall reside at Sitka.

It must therefore be conceded that Alaska is the customs collection "District of Alaska," and has been such "District of Alaska" since July 27, 1868, when the United States first extended its laws there. This is not an unusual situation; witness the State of Delaware (U. S. Rev. Stat., 1878):

SEC. 2546. There shall be in the State of Delaware one collection district, as follows:
"The district of Delaware to comprise the State of Delaware, in which Wilmington shall be the port of entry and New Castle, Port Penn, and Delaware City ports of delivery."

As Delaware is both the customs collection "District of Delaware" and the political State of Delaware, so is Alaska both the customs collection "District of Alaska" and the political Territory of Alaska.

ALASKA IS A JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

For 16 years—from 1868 to 1884—Alaska had no courts, but in the latter year the act of May 17, 1884, was passed, adopting the district-court plan there. However, Congress departed from the general rule, since but one district court was thought to be needed in that Territory, and in the first section of that act it was provided that Alaska—

* * * shall constitute a civil and judicial district (23 Stat. L., 24)—

And section 3 provided:

SEC. 3. That there shall be, and hereby is, established a district court for said district, with the civil and criminal jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, and the civil and criminal jurisdiction of district courts of the United States exercising the jurisdiction of circuit courts, and such other jurisdiction, not inconsistent with this act, as may be established by law;
And a district judge shall be appointed for said district * * *.

And thus Alaska was created and organized into a judicial district in accordance with the general plan, although given but one court instead of three, as in other Territories.

ALASKA IS A LAND DISTRICT.

The act of May 17, 1884, also created a land district in Alaska, as follows:

SEC. 8. That the said District of Alaska is hereby created a land district, and a United States land office for said district is hereby located at Sitka.

So that, beginning in 1884, there were three separate legal "Districts of Alaska" in the Territory of Alaska, viz, the customs collection "District of Alaska," the judicial "District of Alaska," and the land office "District of Alaska," and each of these was created and established under the general plan then and now adopted under our departmental system of government, and each of which was, and is, found in all other Territories, and neither has ever heretofore been supposed to detract anything from the political dignity of the Territory in which it existed.

ALASKA IS ALSO A TERRITORY.

That provision of Article IV, section 3, of the Constitution which declares "the Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," is said to be one of the sources, probably the principal source, of the power of Congress to govern the Territories. If Alaska is a Territory in the sense that New Mexico and Arizona are Territories, and occupies the same legal and constitutional status as a Territory that all other Territories have occupied, it is an interesting fact and suggests a plain and well-understood basis for legislation. On the other hand, if it does not occupy that status it is important to have its true legal character stated, so that intelligent action in respect to it may be had by Congress.

Fortunately, the question has been determined by the highest authority and is not open to serious doubt. In a number of cases from Alaska, and in the insular cases, the Supreme Court of the United States has laid down the rules which determine the political character of the Territory, and these rules only need to be known and applied to give Alaska that standing to which it is entitled by reason of its great resources and the vigorous character and manhood of its citizens.

In the case of Steamer Coquitlam v. United States (163 U. S., 346–352), the political status of Alaska first came squarely before the Supreme Court of the United States for consideration, and the court said:

Alaska is one of the Territories of the United States. It was so designated in that order (assigning Alaska to the ninth judicial circuit), and has always been so regarded. And the court established by the act of 1884 is the court of last resort within the limits of that Territory.

Held, that the district court of Alaska was "in every substantial sense the supreme court of that Territory."

Again, in 1903, the same court, in deciding the case of Binns v. United States (194 U. S., 486–490), wherein the constitutionality of the license laws of Alaska was involved, quoted from the Coquitlam case, and then affirmed it, as follows:

It has been therefore held by this court in Steamer Coquitlam v. United States (163 U. S., 346–352) that "Alaska is one of the Territories of the United States. It was so designated in that order (the order assigning the Territory to the ninth judicial circuit), and has always been so regarded. And the court established by the act of 1884 is the court of last resort within the limits of the Territory." Nor can it be doubted that it is an organized Territory, for the act of May 17, 1884 (23 Stat., 24), entitled "An act providing a civil government for Alaska," provided "that the territory ceded to the United States by Russia by the treaty of March 30, 1867, and known as Alaska, shall constitute a civil and judicial district, the government of which shall be organized and administered as hereinafter provided." (See also 31 Stat., 321, sec. 1.)

Having thus affirmed its former decision that "Alaska is one of the Territories of the United States," and having then declared that it was an "organized Territory," the court turned its attention to the form of government which Congress had power to establish in a Territory, and said:

It must be remembered that Congress, in the government of the Territories, as well as of the District of Columbia, has plenary power, save as controlled by the provisions of the Constitution, that the form of government it shall establish is not prescribed and may not necessarily be the same in all the Territories. We are accustomed to that generally adopted for the Territories of a quasi State government, with the executive, legislative, and judicial officers, and a legislature endowed with the power of local taxation and local expenditures, but Congress is not limited to this form. In the District of Columbia it has adopted a different form of government, and in Alaska still another. It may legislate directly in respect to local affairs of a Territory or transfer the power of such legislation to a legislature elected by the citizens of the Territory It has provided in the District of Columbia for a board of three commissioners, who are the controlling officers for the District. It may intrust to them a large volume of legislative power or it may by direct legislation create the whole body of statutory law applicable thereto. For Alaska Congress has established a government of a different form. It has provided no legislative body, but only executive and judicial officers. It has enacted a penal and civil code. Having created no local legisiative body and provided for no local legislation in respect to the matter of revenues, it has established a revenue system of its own, applicable alone to that Territory.

And the court held that Congress had the power, as the legislature of the Territory of Alaska, to enact the license laws in question and that they were not unconstitutional.

In the last and most important case wherein the status of Alaska has been defined—Rasmussen v. United States (197 U. S., 516–524)—the Supreme Court for the third time declared "Alaska is one of the Territories of the United States;" and again, upon a very careful examination of the identical point, held that Alaska is also an organized Territory of the United States.

And in a case decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, on October 2, 1911, that court, following the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, held (191 Fed. Rep., 141):

Since the passage of act of May 17, 1884 (ch. 53, 23 Stat., 24), providing a civil government for Alaska, that Territory has been an organized Territory of the United States, and by virtue of Revised Statutes, section 1891, which provides that "the Constitution and all the laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within all the organized Territories and in every Territory hereafter organized as elsewhere within the United States" all laws of Congress of general application not locally inapplicable are in effect in Alaska.

The President of the United States approved the opinion of the Judge Advocate General of the United States Army who, after quoting the foregoing decisions of the United States Supreme Court, held that—

In view of the express legislative and judicial recognition of the status of Alaska as a Territory, it is the opinion of this office that Alaska is a "Territory" within the meaning of section 1315, Revised Statutes, as amended, and as such is entitled to a cadet at the Military Academy.

The President thereupon appointed a cadet from the Territory of Alaska.

On May 7, 1906, Congress passed an act for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the Territory of Alaska, and the first section provides—

That the people of the Territory of Alaska shall be represented by a Delegate in the House of Representatives of the United States, chosen by the people thereof in the manner and at the time hereinafter prescribed, and who shall be known as the Delegate from Alaska.

That Alaska is one of the organized Territories of the United States has thus been expressly declared. First, by the Supreme Court of the United States, the judicial department of the Government; second, by the President of the United States, the executive department of the Government; third, by Congress, the legislative department of the Government.

THE CONSTITUTION EXTENDS OVER ALASKA.

Section 1891 of the Revised Statutes provides:

SEC. 1891. The Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within all the organized Territories, and in every Territory hereafter organized as elsewhere within the United States.

In Binns against United States, supra, the Supreme Court declared that "Alaska is one of the Territories of the United States," and then adds, "Nor can it be doubted that it is an organized Territory." It follows by the direct enactment of Congress and the force of section 1891, above quoted, that the Constitution has the same force and effect within the Territory of Alaska as elsewhere within the United States. Fortunately, again, we are not left in any doubt upon this point, for in the case of Rasmussen v. United States (197 U. S., 516) the Supreme Court, upon a most careful examination of the question, decided that—

Under the treaty with Russia ceding Alaska, and the subsequent legislation of Congress, Alaska has been incorporated into the United States, and the Constitution is applicable to that Territory.

The court held that the Constitution had been extended to Alaska, but declined to admit that the result was due solely to the force of the act of Congress as expressed in section 1891, saying:

Without attempting to examine in detail the opinions in the various cases, in our judgment it clearly results from them that they substantially rested upon the proposition that where territory was a part of the United States the inhabitants thereof were entitled to the guaranties of the fifth, sixth, and seventh amendments, and that the act or acts of Congress purporting to extend the Constitution were considered as declaratory merely of a result which existed independently by the inherent operation of the Constitution.

The Constitution, then, was extended to Alaska by its own inherent operation when Alaska became incorporated into and a part of the United States, and section 1891, Revised Statutes, was merely declaratory of the rule.

It is not necessary to cite other authorities or argument to demonstrate that—

1. Alaska is one of the Territories of the United States.
2. It is an organized Territory.
3. The Constitution of the United States extends over it.
4. It is incorporated into the United States.
5. It occupies the identical plane of relationship to the United States and to the several States that Arizona and New Mexico do.
6. The treaty of cession pledged the United States that the inhabitants thereof "shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States," and therefore.
7. In the natural course of events, when its territory shall be settled and organized and when its growth and permanent development shall make it desirable, one or more sovereign States will be organized out of the Territory of Alaska and admitted into the Union.

EXTENSION OF REPUBLICAN INSTITUTIONS.

In Alaska, then, we find a great Territory, equal in extent to one-sixth of the whole area of the United States, now a part of the body of our Nation, entitled to all those constitutional rights which every other American Territory has received, and dedicated to constitutional freedom. Without Alaska shall be ceded to a foreign nation by the United States, it must inevitably continue to be developed, guided, and controlled by its people, under the Constitution of the United States, until finally it shall become one (or more) of the sovereign States in the American Union. That result can not finally be avoided, though it may long be delayed by the refusal of Congress to give its active aid and assistance to bring it to fruition.

Sumner and Seward, and that group of statesmen which represented the ideas of their great leader, Abraham Lincoln, clearly foresaw the strategic and material value of the Territory to the United States and intended that Alaska should become a member of the family of the United States upon exact constitutional equality with every other member thereof. The Supreme Court of the United States has clearly, forcefully, and finally determined that their efforts were effectual.

William H. Seward, Secretary of State, who signed the emancipation proclamation with Abraham Lincoln, wrote the treaty by which the United States acquired Alaska. The third article of that treaty was drawn from and based upon similar articles in the Louisiana, Florida, and Mexican treaties, all of which gave national pledges that the territory thereby included within the extended dominion of the United States should be created into sovereign States and admitted, as soon as may be, into the Union of the United States. Alaska has the same pledge for the establishment of a republican form of government that lies at the foundation of every State government west of the Mississippi River.

In his great speech, delivered in the United States Senate on May 28, 1867, urging the immediate ratification of the treaty for the acquisition of Russian America, Charles Sumner, the Senator from Massachusetts, in chaste and beautiful language expressed the purpose of the United States in thus acquiring and extending their dominion over Alaska. His words are so fraught with meaning and importance to my Territory that I shall quote them in full:

More than the extension of dominion is the extension of republican institutions, which is a traditional aspiration. It was in this spirit that independence was achieved. In the name of human rights our fathers overthrew the kingly power, whose representative was George the Third. They set themselves openly against this form of government. They were against it for themselves, and offered their example to mankind. They were Roman in character, and turned to Roman lessons. With a cynical austerity the early Cato said that the kings were "carniverous animals," and at his instance the Roman Senate decreed that no king should be allowed within the gates of the city. A kindred sentiment, with less austerity of form, has been received from our fathers; but our city can be nothing less than the North American continent with its gates on all the surrounding seas.

John Adams, in the preface to his Defense of the American Constitution, written in London, where he resided at the time as minister, and dated January 1, 1787, at Grosvenor Square, the central seat of aristocratic fashion, after exposing the fabulous origin of the kingly power in contrast with the simple origin of our republican institutions, thus for a moment lifts the curtain of the future: "Thirteen governments," he said plainly, "thus founded on the natural authority of the people alone, and without any pretense of miracle or mystery, and which are destined to spread over the northern part of that whole quarter of the globe, is a great point gained in favor of the rights of mankind." (John Adams's works, vol. 4, p. 293.) Thus, according to this prophetic minister, even at that early day was the destiny of the Republic manifest. It was to spread over the northern part of the American quarter of the globe; and it was to be a support to the rights of mankind.

By the text of our Constitution the United States are bound to guarantee a "republican form of government" to every State in this Union; but this obligation, which is only applicable at home, is an unquestionable indication of the national aspiration everywhere. The Republic is something more than a local policy; it is a general principle, not to be forgotten at any time, especially when the opportunity is presented of bringing an immense region within its influence. Elsewhere it has for the present failed, but on this account our example is more important. Who can forget the generous lament of Lord Byron, whose passion for freedom was not mitigated by his rank as an hereditary legislator of England, when he exclaims in memorable verse:

"The name of commonwealth is past and gone
O'er the three fractions of the groaning globe."

Who can forget the salutation which the poet sends to the "one great clime," which, nursed in freedom, enjoys what he calls "the proud distinction" of not being confounded with other lands—

"Whose sons must bow them at a monarch's motion,
As if his senseless scepter were a wand."

The present treaty is a visible step in the occupation of the whole North American Continent. As such it will be recognized by the world and accepted by the American people. But the treaty involves something more. By it we dismiss one more monarch from this continent. One by one they have retired; first France, then Spain, then France again, and now Russia, all giving way to that absorbing unity which is declared in the national motto, "E pluribus unum."

Seward wrote the Nation's pledge for the extension of republican government to Alaska; Sumner announced, amplified, and successfully defended it before the Senate; the Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed and applied it in many decisions; it is now the duty of the Congress of the United States to recognize and carry it into execution.

A CENTURY OF SERVITUDE TO RUSSIA.

Even if it be conceded that Alaska, as soon as may be, is entitled to have a republican form of government organized within its borders, it must also be conceded that Congress would not be justified in establishing it there until by sufficient population and other development of its resources the people would be benefited thereby. That concession requires those who are urging upon Congress the necessity for such action at this time to demonstrate that the time has arrived when Alaska has reached that period of development. Undoubtedly, as Senator Sumner so forcibly declared, the principle upon which the right of the people to a republican form of government is based was extended to Alaska at the moment of its incorporation into the political body of the United States; but as a practical matter Congress must determine, in its discretion, when the time shall arrive to move forward along the line of the principle and erect the framework of the government. If that time has arrived, as I think it has, Congress should act in compliance with the existing principle and enact the necessary legislation.

The time had not arrived in 1867. The vital principle upon which a republican form of government is based had no existence in the autocratic system which governed the Russian Empire.

Before Thomas Jefferson became President of the United States, and in 1799 Alaska and all its resources were leased by the Czar of all the Russias to the Russian-American Co. While it had been previously explored and its resources prospected by hardy and independent traders and subjects of the Czar, while they had blazed the trails and located the natural wealth of the land and the sea, this first leasing bill destroyed their pioneer rights and compelled them to return to Siberia in despair or to accept such employment as the company might give its serfs, at such wages as it pleased to bestow.

Again, 20 and 40 years later, he extended the lease, and that fur-trading monopoly was the ruler of the land and sea until in 1867 the United States purchased the Territory for $7,200,000. The conditions prevailing there in 1867 demonstrated that an autocratic leasing system, based upon a Government monopoly, had failed in a century of trial to create such a development in population and trade as to justify the United States in supplanting it with even the simple expedient of an American Territorial government. In his faithful photographic review of the conditions existing in Alaska when the United States acquired it in 1867, Senator Sumner declared:

These general considerations are reenforced when we call to mind the little influence which Russia has thus far been able to exercise in this region. Though possessing dominion over it for more than a century, this gigantic power has not been more genial or productive there than the soil itself. Her government there is little more than a name or a shadow. It is not even a skeleton. It is hardly visible. Its only representative is a fur company, to which has been added latterly an ice company. The immense country is without form and without light, without activity and without progress. Distant from the imperial capital and separated from the huge bulk of Russian Empire, it does not share the vitality of a common country. Its life is solitary and feeble. Its settlements are only encampments or lodges. Its fisheries are only a petty perquisite, belonging to local or personal adventurers rather than to the commerce of nations.

A CONTRAST—RUSSIAN POWER V. AMERICAN PRINCIPLE.

It ought to be a matter of profound satisfaction to every advocate of the principle of free government to compare the Alaska of to-day, after less than 45 years of American effort, with the photographic sketch of its century of stagnation and failure under Russian autocracy, just quoted from Senator Sumner's masterly description. I present that contrast with pride in the marvelous achievements of my constituents and countrymen, with renewed fealty to the principles of free government which made it possible for them to accomplish the work, and with the hope that the Members of this House will share that just pride with me and give such further aid to the continued growth of our institutions there as will result from the passage of the pending bill.

Before entering upon a discussion of the trade and commerce of Alaska, as shown upon the charts and statistical tables which I now exhibit to the House, I wish to refer to the concluding remarks of the Massachusetts Senator in urging the United States Senate to ratify the treaty for the purchase of Alaska. After having suggested to the Senate some of the labors necessary to the creation of a commonwealth in Alaska, and after having pointed out the necessity for a coast and geodetic survey of her waters and shores and an examination of her fisheries and mineral resources, he concluded his great oration with these words, which ought to be emblazoned in letters of gold upon Alaska's monument to Charles Sumner:

But your best work and most important endowment will be the republican government which, looking to a long future, you will organize, with schools free to all, and with equal laws before which every citizen will stand erect in the consciousness of manhood. Here will be a motive power without which coal itself will be insufficient. Here will be a source of wealth more inexhaustible than any fisheries. Bestow such a government and you will bestow what is better than all you can receive, whether quintals of fish, sands of gold, choicest furs, or most beautiful ivory.

Permit me now to call your attention to this map of the northern parts of America and Asia. It correctly delineates the positions of the northern parts of the American Continent in their relation to Siberia, Japan, China, and the Philippine Islands, and you will notice that Alaska occupies the mid-position between them. Your attention is called to the fact that Alaska is on the North Pacific steamship route from Panama, San Francisco, Seattle, Vancouver, and Prince Rupert to the Orient. A careful study of the situation must demonstrate that Alaska not only occupies a strategic position in respect to the trade and commerce between the United States and the Orient, but also in respect to military and naval affairs in the north Pacific Ocean, since the most direct route from San Francisco and Seattle to Yokohama and the Philippine Islands passes the southern coasts of Alaska. Alaska must be the base of supplies, the coaling station and harbor for our fleet in the North Pacific. I call your attention to the fact that from San Francisco to Yokohama via the coast of Alaska is but 4,470 miles, while from San Francisco to Yokohama via the Hawaiian Islands is 5,540 miles, or more than a thousand miles greater than the Alaskan route.

Mr. Chairman, I desire now to call to the attention of the House some of the great resources of Alaska. We have a population of 36,347 white people in Alaska, according to the census, but really more than 40,000 white people. Considered from the amount of trade originating in Alaska, these 40,000 white people are the most valuable in the United States trade territory.

I call your attention to the statistics of Alaska fisheries. Alaska has the richest fisheries in the world. The chart which I now exhibit shows the total pack of canned salmon on the Pacific coast from 1864 to 1911:

I call your attention to the fact that out of the 87,037,884 cases of salmon canned upon the Pacific coast since 1864 only 15.02 per cent were canned in the State of Washington, 20.11 per cent on the Columbia River, 2.28 per cent in Oregon, 1.66 per cent in California, 19.12 per cent in British Columbia, and 41.81 per cent were canned in Alaska. The salmon of Alaska are more valuable, too, in proportion to the pack than in any of the other districts on account of the fact that Alaska produces a larger proportion of the higher grade fish.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman before he leaves the question of fisheries.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alaska yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The gentleman did not give the value of fisheries production for the last year and the year before?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; I have not done so yet.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I have it here for the last two years, and I would like to suggest it. In 1910 there was taken from the Alaska salmon fisheries alone $11,086,322, and in 1911 $14,593,237.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; and in the same year, when Alaska produced $14,593,237 worth of fish, the Newfoundland bank fisheries landed at Gloucester and Boston were of the value of only $4,833,341.

I now exhibit another table showing the value of the sea and fur products and mineral production of Alaska from 1880 to 1911, inclusive, and I call your attention to the fact that during that period the miners of Alaska have extracted from the earth more than $195,000,000 in gold and more than $206,000,000 in mineral products. I then call your attention to the output of our fisheries, $222,710,036, and the total sum of our sea and fur products and minerals, which is the enormous sum of $429,523,630.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alaska yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Under the provisions of this bill would the Territorial legislature have any jurisdiction over the matter of game and fisheries?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Undoubtedly, except as it might come in conflict with an act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Does not the bill expressly provide that if it does come in conflict with the act of Congress, the Territorial legislature may repeal the act of Congress.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. I am glad to hear the gentleman's opinion about that, although that is very plainly in the bill.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not think a Territorial legislature could be given power to control Congress or repeal its legislation.

Mr. MANN. Not without authority, but the express authority is given in this bill to repeal an act of Congress.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Congress passed a criminal code for Alaska in 1899 and a civil code in 1900, a class of legislation never before given to a Territory by the Congress, and it is necessary for the Alaska Legislature to have authority to change, correct, or amend those codes. It is an unusual situation.

Mr. MANN. Very likely that is true, but what I wanted to know was whether under the provisions of this bill the practical power of Congress over the protection of the game and fisheries of Alaska is not turned over to the Territorial legislature, so that we practically have nothing further to do with it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Of course Congress can pass any law it sees fit upon both those subjects, and such a law passed by Congress would be paramount.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe that the legislature of Alaska is as likely to conserve the game and fisheries of Alaska as is Congress? I will not ask the gentleman that question——

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I wish the gentleman would ask me that question.

Mr. MANN. He will say that the Territorial legislature is as likely to conserve the game and fisheries of Alaska as is Congress.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I certainly do say so.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman will say that they would also conserve the land and the coal as well as Congress would.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I might even say that.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What is a fair average price for these agricultural lands which you say are valuable for the raising of oats and potatoes?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There is no price except that fixed by the Government. There is an act of Congress giving settlers in Alaska the right to locate 320 acres each for a homestead, and any man the head of a family may go to Alaska and locate upon and acquire 320 acres of this land without price, except the price which he pays at the land office—$1.25 or $2.50 an acre.

Now, I call the attention of the House to a statement of the amount of money which the people of the Territory of Alaska have paid in to the Government of the United States by way of internal revenue, customs, and public lands, and all other items. It amounts to $14,792,000.

[1] The Territory of Alaska was attached to the District of Oregon, Dec. 27, 1872, and on Sept. 1, 1883, Washington and Oregon were consolidated; again on Sept. 1, 1902, Washington and Alaska were detached from the District of Oregon and made a separate district.
[2] Act of Jan. 27, 1905. [3] Forfeiture for taking seals unlawfully, included, $1,000. [4] Included under "Tax on sealskins."

Mr. NYE. In what length of time?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Since 1867. This includes the amounts paid for customs, internal revenue, public lands, tax on sealskins, rent of seal islands, Alaska fund, and miscellaneous, and the total is $14,792,464.17, but this does not include the sum paid to the United States for telegraph tolls upon lines which are charged against Alaska. That gives us a further credit of about $2,000,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. What about the timber resources of Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. We have bodies of timber in southeastern Alaska—cedar, spruce, and other varieties of that kind—but in the central part of Alaska we only have spruce trees of merchantable size, and at Fairbanks we have sawmills, sash and door factories, and shops for the manufacture of such carpentry as we need in that country.

I now call your attention to the trade and commerce of Alaska, and those of you who have any interest in the growth and development of the trade and commerce of the United States ought to consider that with Alaska. It is supposed by some uninformed persons that there is nothing in Alaska except ice fields, and that it has no trade or commerce of any kind, but I now inform the House that Alaska has a greater trade with the United States than 43 other countries of the world.

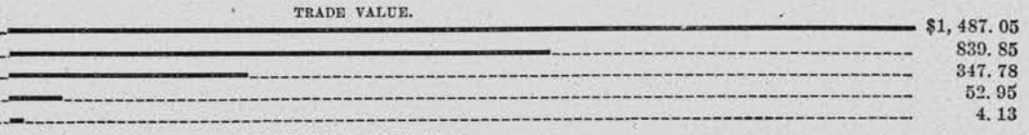
COMPARATIVE DIAGRAM SHOWING TOTAL AVERAGE ANNUAL COMMERCE OF ALASKA AND OTHER SPECIFIED COUNTRIES WITH THE UNITED STATES DURING EIGHT YEARS FROM 1904 TO 1911, INCLUSIVE.

I call your attention to this chart, showing the trade of Alaska for eight years from 1904 to 1911, with an average trade of $55,862,077 per year. I then call your attention to the fact that this statement shows that there are 43 countries of the world whose trade with the United States is less than that of Alaska. Scotland has an average trade of only $49,000,000 per annum, while Spain, Russia in Europe, Ireland, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Portugal, Turkey in Europe, and Greece each has less trade with the United States than Alaska. Coming to North America, Porto Rico had a trade with the United States for the eight years shown on this chart averaging only $45,734,534, while 13 other North American countries shown below Porto Rico had a less trade with the United States than $28,000,000 each. In South America, Chile, Colombia, Peru, Venezuela, Uruguay, and Ecuador each had a less trade with the United States than Alaska; as a matter of fact, the trade with all of them is a little more than that of Alaska with the United States. Then notice the trade of Hawaii, which averages only $51,487,809 per annum for the last eight years; the Philippine Islands, which averages only $23,406,380 for the last eight years. Total British Australasia is much less than Alaska, while New Zealand is less than one-fifth as much. Alaska has more than twice the trade with the United States that the Philippine Islands have. I call your attention to Africa, where Egypt has less than one-fourth of the trade with the United States that Alaska has, and the whole trade of the Continent of Africa with the United States is nearly $20,000,000 less than the trade of Alaska.

China, with her 450,000,000 people, had a trade with the United States for the eight years shown on this chart averaging $56,402,715, only $600,000 per annum more than that of Alaska. The whole trade of Russia with the United States is less than that of Alaska; the whole trade of Turkey with the United States is less than that of Alaska.

COMPARATIVE DIAGRAM SHOWING TOTAL COMMERCE OF ALASKA AND THAT OF SPECIFIED COUNTRIES.



I now call your attention to a comparative diagram showing the total commerce of Alaska and that of specified countries of the world. The total trade and commerce of Alaska for the year 1910 was $60,220,132. Now, this chart shows 27 countries of the world, each of which had a less total trade with the world than Alaska had in the same year. For instance, Peru in 1909 had a total trade with the world of $52,516,000. Greece in 1909 had a total trade with the world of $43,598,000. Colombia, Venezuela, Honduras, Ecuador, Morocco, Guatemala, Panama, and Salvador—each of these countries had a less trade with the world in the year 1910 than Alaska. I call your special attention to this fact that Alaska has a larger total trade with the world than each of these 27 countries, because I wish to refer to the fact that many of them support national governments upon that trade. It is charged against Alaska that she ought not to have an elective territorial legislature, all the expenses of which would be paid by the United States, because she could not maintain a few slight, independent, financial burdens which Territories ordinarily meet. There is nothing in the bill before the House to require Alaska to assume any financial burden whatever, and in view of the fact that the bill does provide that neither the Territory of Alaska nor any municipal division therein can become indebted for any purpose whatever, it is apparent that whatever financial burdens she creates must be met immediately with the cash. If she does not have the money she can not assume the burden. But in view of the fact that Peru, Colombia, Venezuela, Honduras, and these 27 countries of the world, each with a less total trade than Alaska, find themselves able to maintain national as well as municipal governments ought to convince this House that Alaska can raise a small sum of money for the beginning of a territorial government therein.

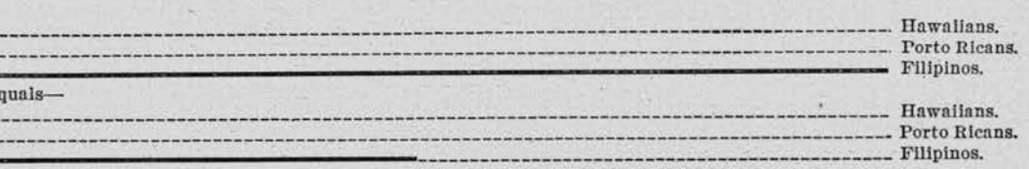
Of course, it may be said that this great trade and commerce in Alaska is ephemeral and will not continue, but the truth is, and the evidence in the Bureau of Statistics shows it, and these charts drawn therefrom show it, that from 1867 to this moment trade with Alaska has been steadily increasing, notwithstanding the fact that Congress has given little aid, support, or sympathy to that Territory. The trade there is growing year by year, and if Congress would only understand the situation and give the Territory sympathetic development by passing the necessary legislation, that great Territory will continue to increase its trade as the years go on.

Your attention is called to the trade value of white Alaskans in comparison with the trade value of the people of Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines.

Diagram showing commercial worth to the United States of each inhabitant (according to population census of 1910) of the noncontiguous Territories and insular possessions for the fiscal year 1910.

TRADE VALUE.

COMPARATIVE TRADE VALUE.



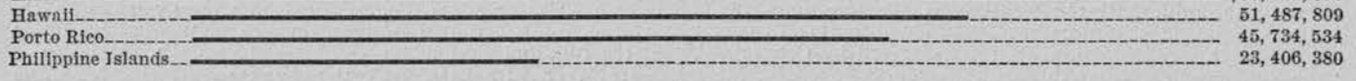


Diagram showing the total average commerce of Alaska and the total average commerce of specified insular possessions with the United States from 1904 to 1911, both inclusive.

Dividing the total trade of Alaska for the year 1910 by the total number of white people shown by the census to inhabit the Territory, it will be found that each white Alaskan in that year was worth $1,487.75 in trade with the United States. If to the white population you add all the Indians—men, women, and children—then each inhabitant in Alaska was worth $839.85. By the same analysis each Hawaiian in 1910 was worth $347.78, each Porto Rican $52.95, and each Filipino only $4.13. In other words, every white man, woman, and child in Alaska was worth 4.3 Hawaiians, or 28 Porto Ricans, or 360 Filipinos.

I now call your attention to the Alaska balance sheet, which shows upon the one hand the total production of Alaska from 1867 to 1911, and upon the other hand the total cash disbursements made by the Government of the United States for every purpose in the Territory of Alaska from the date we purchased it until 1911. We have produced in Alaska from 1867 until 1911, $206,813,594 in minerals, and in sea and fur products the sum of $222,710,036, and we have paid into the Treasury of the United States from customs, internal revenue and license taxes, and other cash items $17,117,354.79, making a total production and export from Alaska into the United States of $446,640,984.79. [Applause.]

Balance sheet of United States in account with Alaska, 1867 to 1911, both inclusive.

On the other side of that balance sheet is the $7,200,000 which the Government of the United States paid to Russia for Alaska; then the Treasury statements for the payments made from 1867 to 1911, inclusive, except the expenses which are in the next item. The total moneys expended by the Government of the United States in Alaska from 1867 to 1911 in maintaining the National Government there, collecting customs and the revenues, maintaining the courts, the fur-seal fisheries, boundary commissions, and generally all items of governmental expense in the Territory of Alaska have amounted only to $35,816,674.25. That leaves a difference between the productions of Alaska and the amount the Government of the United States has expended therein of $410,824,310.54. [Applause.] That is the gross sum which the people—the merchants, banks, and the trade in the United States—have received from Alaska over the sum expended in buying and maintaining that Territory. All that wealth has been produced by Alaskans, who now ask the poor boon of permission to create an agency there in aid of Congress in governing themselves and creating more wealth.

Mr. TILSON. Does that include expenditures made by the War Department for the Army?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It does for military cables, telegraph lines and roads, but not for military posts and the support of the Army. I have here a statement of the Treasury Department, showing all the items, which has been exhibited to the committee in detail.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What does that $17,117,354.79 include?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. All the receipts of the Government from internal revenues, customs, public lands, moneys paid into the Alaskan fund, and everything of that kind—cash received by the United States from Alaska. Between 1867 and 1911 the merchants and the people of the United States have received in cash, in gold and silver and copper and fish, $410,824,310.54 more than the Government of the United States has actually expended in the Territory of Alaska. I challenge any man in this House to show a better balance sheet for his State than that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has given us a statement of the amount of money received and the amount that the Government has expended for Alaska.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The amount of appropriations, the amount for the post offices, but the gentleman has overlooked entirely the value in land and gold in Alaska, all belonging to the Government of the United States.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; that is a matter for fair consideration. These 40,000 white people are in Alaska working on your lands. We are developing your country; we are establishing civilization; we are building roads, churches, schools, and all that goes to make life safe and sacred in that Territory; and we are paying the bills ten times over out of our labor. Now, we say to you that we are good American citizens, that there are 40,000 of us who have the ideals of American citizens, and we want to be treated just as other American citizens have been treated in the Territories of the United States. [Applause.] We want to be treated like men who believe in the principles of the Declaration of Independence—like you ought to treat your own brothers and sisters who are engaged in nation building on the distant frontier.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, is it the gentleman's intention to put into the RECORD in connection with his speech the charts to which he has referred?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad to take up the subject of this bill and to answer any inquiry which may be made concerning it. When it was first introduced in this House three years ago I sent 5,000 copies of it out to the people of the Territory of Alaska. It has been published in all of the newspapers of that Territory. Our people are all in favor of it. It has been before both Senate and House committees of Congress for three years. It has been examined in every aspect, and our people are for it. The people of the Pacific coast favor it, and I am satisfied that the Members of this House will pass it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Outside of the productiveness of Alaska and the benefit it has been to the United States, the purpose of this bill is that these people living in this community may be given an opportunity to pass the laws under which they live and can control and conduct their business. Is not that the main object and purpose of the legislation?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is the main purpose and the only purpose of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. And ought not these people to be given an opportunity to pass laws under which they must live and control themselves as the people of any other part of the United States?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes. We think so.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I feel very well satisfied with the presentation the gentleman is making and I know it is very interesting; it has satisfied me thoroughly and I am ready to vote for his bill.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Thank you, sir. I have not labored in vain.

Mr. BUTLER. But I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not in the third section of this bill there is not authority conferred upon the legislature to repeal the acts of Congress that we passed?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is necessary to give the legislature authority to alter, amend, or repeal some of the laws passed by Congress, such as our civil and criminal codes, but there is a special exception in section 3 that this power shall not extend to the customs, internal revenue, postal, or other general laws of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. I appreciate that. At the same time I understood the gentleman to say, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, that there was no authority conferred upon this legislature to repeal existing acts of Congress applicable to Alaska.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think the legislature does have some proper authority in that respect, and it is necessary. If you created a legislature in Alaska and did not give it that power it could do nothing after it was created, because the criminal and civil codes now in force in Alaska, not including, of course, the United States penal laws, are laws passed by Congress. I think the matter is safely limited by section 3.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman appreciates the efforts that have been made by the Government to conserve the property of the Government.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do, and I sympathize with them thoroughly.

Mr. BUTLER. I have known the gentleman's position these years we have served together. Is there anything anywhere in this proposed act that would authorize the legislature to change the laws in regard to conservation, so as to interfere with the policy of the Government in any way in that direction?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has been very generous in permitting us to ask him questions. I ask unanimous consent that he may have five minutes——

Mr. MANN. The time is under control and it can be yielded to him.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would like to have 15 minutes, so that I may answer questions.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alaska.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield to a suggestion? I want to call his attention to the last section of the bill.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. While that is being done I want to call the attention of the House to the 9th section, as follows:

> The legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

After having granted that power, the section proceeds with limitations. The first of those limitations is this one:

> But no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil.

So that the legislature in Alaska would have no power to dispose of the public domain or anything contained within it. The legislature would have no authority to dispose of any part or portion of the public lands of Alaska, the water power, or the coal or gold, or any of the natural resources of that Territory contained in or upon the public lands.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, does the last section—section 17—cover all the laws or embrace all the laws that may be passed?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It does.

Mr. BUTLER. So that the Congress will have the opportunity of passing upon these laws before they become effective in Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Congress has the constitutional right and duty to legislate for the Territories. Congress can repeal any act of a Territorial legislature by an act of Congress.

Mr. TILSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that these laws will have no effect until they are submitted to Congress?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I did not say that.

Mr. TILSON. But after they have gone into effect they may be disapproved and set aside by Congress?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes, sir; that is the situation exactly. Until Congress shall disapprove an act of the legislature, however, it would be the law. It would be effective until disapproved.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not think the gentleman exactly understood the question. These laws are submitted to Congress, and if disapproved by Congress they do not become effective.

Mr. TILSON. They go into effect, though, from the time of their passage, or from the time stated, and remain in effect until disapproved of by Congress?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think so. That has been the rule in all the Territories.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to suggest this: As to this fear that the Territorial legislature is going to do something it ought not to do, in addition to the limitation in this last section, the governor, appointed by the President, has the veto power.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes. There are two vetoes on everything the legislature may do. There is a veto by the governor, appointed by the President of the United States, and if he vetoes a bill it shall not become a law. If he approves it, and if it becomes a law, it is referred to the President, and he lays it before Congress, and Congress may disapprove it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield? What is the power of the veto and passing the veto over the governor's head?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is the usual veto power given to the governor in all the Territories.

Mr. MANN. A vetoed bill can not become a law.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not unless it is passed over the veto.

Mr. MANN. By a two-thirds vote?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes. That is the usual provision in all Territorial organic acts. I want to say further to the House that every provision, as I remember it, in this bill has been taken bodily from some other Territorial organic act heretofore passed by Congress. Generally they are the old, tried provisions of the organic acts which have been enacted into law in creating Territories ever since the first Territory was created in 1787. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alaska yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I see you have an election in Alaska now for Delegate, in August, have you not?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What is the object in having another election in November for the Territorial legislature?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Only to make it conform to the general rule. And I will say to the gentleman that formerly this bill contained a provision requiring the election intended to be held in August to be held in November, so that both might be held at the same time, but it was thought best by the committee not to do that, in view of the doubt as to whether this bill might be passed in time, because the August election for Delegate in Alaska is drawing near at hand. On that account it was changed in that respect. I think both elections ought to be held on the same day, if that is what the gentleman has in mind. There is no necessity for two elections in the same year in Alaska. I think that ought to be amended at the next meeting of Congress, so that we can have both of them held at the same time.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman say "the next meeting of Congress"? Is Congress at any other meeting more apt to legislate on the subject than at this?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not know of any reason for holding two elections in the same year.

Mr. MANN. What is the object of changing the date from August to November in Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. My purpose was twofold. First, that both elections might be held on the national election day; and, second, that we might hold our elections in Alaska in November, when the transient fishermen who are imported from Seattle and San Francisco to fish in the summer time are away. Those fishermen frequently take it into their heads to vote at the elections in Alaska. They are there in August and they are not there in November, and, being disqualified, ought not to be allowed to vote.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not know whether they become citizens of Alaska or not, does he? Do I understand the purpose of changing the date is to prevent people from voting who are absent at that time?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not at all. It is merely to prevent illegal voting by persons who are not citizens of Alaska.

Mr. MANN. Is it not more convenient to the people to have an election in August than in November?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; it is not. It is more convenient to hold it in November. It was supposed when the act was passed, in 1906, when the election was fixed for Delegate, that it would be more convenient to have it in August, but it has been found by experience that it is more convenient to have it in November.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I have not had the honor or pleasure of visiting Alaska, and the gentleman overturns many preconceptions I have had heretofore about Alaska. Under the same conditions it would be preferable here to have the election in August, but certainly it is not desirable to hold an election in August and then another one in November in a place where the population is small and the Territory sparsely settled and the number of officers not very great. We have abolished that in almost every State in the Union.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I agree so nearly with the gentleman that I do not like to have any controversy with him about it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not have any controversy with me. I was appealing to the gentleman for information as to why this was.

Now, I would like to ask the gentleman, further, with reference to the game and fish laws and the control over railroads, and other things of that kind, in this bill: Is the gentleman quite sure that the laws that we have passed for the preservation of game in Alaska will be as safe in the hands of the Territorial legislature as they will be in the control of Congress?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think they would be; but I hope that Congress will not put them there. I think that Congress has entered upon a great national policy of conserving the wild animals and wild game of our country, and I hope it will not abandon it.

Mr. MANN. But it would abandon it by this bill.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not think so.

Mr. MANN. Why not? Does not this bill confer upon the legislature of Alaska the absolute authority to legislate in reference to the preservation of game, subject, of course, to our repealing their laws?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You must assume, then, that the legislature of Alaska is going to destroy the game. I do not agree with the gentleman about that. The people of Alaska have as great an interest in conserving the game as Congress, and more so, because they depend upon it to some extent. They are interested in it. They are good people, and they will protect that game as well as Congress could, but I hope that Congress will continue its policy in that matter.

Mr. MANN. The bulk of the people of Alaska are located in a few centers. They are not specially interested in the control of game. The moment you pass a law giving the Territorial legislature authority over the game and the fisheries, of course you excite the desire on the part of those who wish to change the law about conservation and fisheries to control elections to the legislative body. We have not been very good about the conservation of fisheries and game in Alaska. I think you are likely to be much worse.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I should have no objection to the House putting in a provision reserving the right to Congress to control the game laws. We do not regard that as one of the important things.

Mr. MANN. We have a very good game law there now.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The trouble is about the enforcement of it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not know that there is any trouble in that regard.

Mr. MANN. The people of Alaska are not very anxious to have the game laws enforced.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. On the contrary, I think they are.

Mr. MANN. There are a great many complaints that they are not. I do not know what the facts are.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think no citizen of Alaska has been convicted of a violation of the game laws.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that is true. I doubt whether it is very practicable to convict a citizen of Alaska, under ordinary conditions, in the courts up there. For the same reason if they had power to change the game laws I doubt whether it would be possible to have a law preserving the game of Alaska.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think the gentleman does not know the people of Alaska as well as I do.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the people of Alaska are not very different from the rest of the people of the United States.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is probably true.

Mr. MANN. I do not think they are angels, and I do not think they are devils.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MANN. I have not the floor, but I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIS. Would it meet the objection of the gentleman to add in line 9, page 23, the words "or game laws"?

Mr. MANN. That would meet the objection.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Alaska yield for a question?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman's answer to the gentleman from Illinois might be misinterpreted. The gentleman from Alaska said there had been no convictions of citizens of Alaska for violations of the game laws. Now, I would take that to mean that there had been no necessity for prosecutions.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is true; and I know of but one prosecution, though there may have been more.

Mr. RAKER. The statement should not be construed to mean that, although there had been many arrests and many violations of the law, it had been impossible to secure convictions; but, on the contrary, the gentleman means to convey the idea that the people of Alaska have been trying to obey the laws, and that there has been no necessity to arrest them, and therefore there have been no convictions.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The people of Alaska have been trying to obey the laws, and there have been few arrests, although the Government of the United States has game wardens all over the Territory.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, it would seem unnecessary for any Member to plead with this House in behalf of self-government in any place under the American flag. Indeed, I will not plead, but I feel that I express not only my own sentiment, but the sentiment of every American in this House or out of it, when I demand that the people of Alaska be given the right to govern themselves under a measure of local government readily and promptly passed by this Congress.

That there are conditions in Alaska which cry out for relief there is no longer doubt, and this in spite of all that the Government has done there. Indeed, it can be claimed that even Russia has shown more concern for her subjects in desolate Siberia than our Government has shown for the people of Alaska.

The first of all problems in any land is that of humanity, and it is to the conditions of humanity in Alaska that I would call the attention of the House, because we believe that the unhappy situation complained of can best be reached and remedied under the legislation proposed in this bill. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I desire to incorporate in my remarks part of an editorial printed in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, April 18, 1911, as follows:

[Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Apr. 18, 1911.]

ALASKA AND CANADA.

While the talk of the possible annexation of Alaska by Canada is too absurd for serious consideration at this time, the fact remains that all who are interested in Alaska are compelled to realize that the Alaskans themselves would be far better off under such an administration as Canada would give them, and that the Territory would develop infinitely faster than it can by any possibility if the policies which have been in force for the last few years continue unbroken.

The trouble with Alaska is twofold. It is dependent upon the National Congress for every particle of its legislation, and Congress has such an infinite amount of national work to perform that it has no time to spare to consider the local affairs of a remote Territory, about which the average Member of Congress knows nothing. Further and even more injurious to the interests of the Territory, the one thing which of all others has operated to arrest its development, discourage investment, and drive out of the country those who have gone there in the hope of getting an opportunity to develop the country, is that the faddists have been given a free hand and the Territory has been tied up in every conceivable way to meet the demands of a "conservation" the only object of which seems to be to prevent the present utilization of any of the natural resources of the great Territory.

If the situation could be approached with any sort of common sense; if Alaska could be accorded now precisely the same treatment as that accorded other Territories in the past, and that was none too good, Alaska would develop as other Territories developed; it would receive a great influx of population; its resources would be opened, and it would be among the greatest wealth producers of this continent.

Everyone in Alaska knows that if it were under Canadian rule it would have local self-government at once, and that every encouragement would be lent to the development of the country and the utilization of its resources. Everyone who has looked into the situation at all knows further that the wrongs of the Thirteen Original Colonies, which led to the Revolutionary War, were petty, indeed, beside the wrongs of the people of Alaska, but, save on this coast, no one in the whole country seems to consider that this amounts to anything.

I quote this expression from a reliable American newspaper as reflecting the state of mind of people in an American Territory as well as that of students of Alaska in the States.

And so directly does still another editorial in the same newspaper, April 13, 1911, bear upon the question now before the House that I shall incorporate it in my remarks, as follows:

[The Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Apr. 13, 1911.]

TWO NORTHERN TERRITORIES.

A member of the Yukon council while in Skagway the other day, in speaking about the absence of any system of home rule in Alaska, as contrasted with that which is accorded the Canadian Yukon, gave some pertinent illustrations. He pointed out that, so long as the Canadian territory was governed exclusively from Ottawa by federal officials, conditions were unsatisfactory in every way. The administration given was both expensive and dishonest.

For some years past Yukon territory has had a wholly elective council, which has entire control over all local affairs, and there has never been a time in the history of the territory when conditions were as entirely satisfactory as they are now. Alaska, in this respect, stands where the Yukon territory of Canada did 10 years ago.

In all of the talk about the impossibility of giving Alaska a local government, why is it that no attention is paid to Yukon territory and the Canadian method of dealing with the same problem? The Yukon territory is very much smaller than Alaska, and it has nothing like as large a number of people. In the whole territory there is practically but one industry—that of gold mining—while Alaska exports other products annually of but little less value than its gold. The British Yukon has no coast line. It is isolated far in the interior, and it is difficult to reach any portion of it in the wintertime.

Yet the Canadian Yukon has complete self-government, and full representation in the Dominion Parliament as well. Can it be argued that the Canadians are more capable of self-government that the people of Alaska? Is a gold-mining population on one side of an imaginary line more nomadic than on the other?

The simple truth is that the Canadian Government has treated its people in the North far better than has the Government of the United States and with far more actual respect for the principles upon which our Government is founded than has ever been displayed by Congress.

And now let me add the demand of a Democratic convention held at Fairbanks November 27, 1910. I quote:

[Fairbanks Citizen, Nov. 27, 1910.]

TANANA DEMOCRATS WANT FULL TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT.

At a meeting of the prominent Democrats of Fairbanks plans were laid for an aggressive campaign for full Territorial government for Alaska.

Resolutions were adopted and a petition is being circulated for signatures, which will be forwarded to the Democratic Members of Congress. The Democrats expressed the belief that the hated Beveridge bill, even though revised, would not be given serious attention by Congress at its next session.

Following are the resolutions:

"Whereas it has been deemed expedient for several years by the vast majority of the American citizens residing in Alaska that the interests of Alaska can be more effectually conserved under a full form of Territorial government, with the lawmaking power vested in a local legislature; and

"Whereas, although this desire of the people of Alaska has frequently, through the duly elected Delegate and other sources, been made known to the Government of the United States at Washington, no action has been taken by any Republican administration looking toward the granting of such form of government, the contrary being the case, as expressed in the un-American form of government outlined in the Beveridge bill; and

"Whereas the Democratic Party, at its annual convention held in the city of Denver in July, 1908, embodied as a plank in its platform the recommendation that Alaska be granted the government its people desired, the paragraph relating thereto being as follows:

"'We demand for the people of Alaska and Porto Rico the full enjoyment of the rights and privileges of a Territorial form of government, and the officials appointed to administer the government of all our Territories and the District of Columbia should be thoroughly qualified by previous bona fide residence;' and

"Whereas the people of Alaska have faith in the Democratic Party and its promises and feel assured that its platform will be adhered to: Now, therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the undersigned citizens of Alaska, hereby appeal to our Democratic Senators and Representatives to bring about the enactment of a law which will grant to Alaska 'the fullest enjoyment of the rights and privileges of a Territorial form of government in accordance with the platform adopted at Denver and the wishes of the people of Alaska.'"

While Gov. Walter E. Clark, of Alaska, seems less enthusiastic than others for a local government in that Territory, I desire to quote from the hearing on conditions in Alaska held by the Committee on the Territories February 6, 1912. I quote from page 22 of the report of the hearing in question, where Gov. Clark is quoted thus:

But to return to matters mentioned in my report, after leaving these great questions of coal and fuel and transportation, I want to urge some of the minor needs of the Territory. They are only relatively less important than these other things, and are in themselves absolutely important. I have grouped a number of them there [in his annual report] under the head of "Six minor laws." If I remember correctly, they are quarantine, sanitation and public health, registration of vital statistics, supervision of banks, compulsory school attendance, and relief of destitute white persons.

Now, those are provisions that are entirely lacking in Alaska, which I suppose are afforded to every other part of the civilized world, not only every part under American jurisdiction, but everywhere in the world where civilized people live. We don't have these facilities. If we had a local legislative body—whatever kind of legislative body it might be—some of these things could be supplied; a great many of the more important things could not be, because the Territorial legislature would never have the power to pass that sort of laws.

Mr. YOUNG. Do you attribute the lack of those laws to the neglect of Congress to take hold of this matter?

Gov. CLARK. The neglect of several Congresses. I have the greatest respect for Congress, and don't want to criticize any particular one, but several Congresses have borne the responsibilities pertaining to Alaska, and all of them have neglected these things; and, of course, they are becoming more pressing as the Territory develops.

Mr. Chairman, behind all these political considerations lie the conditions which can be best reached, as I believe, by a local government. Important, indeed, are quarantine, sanitation, vigilant protection of the public health, school attendance, and the keeping of vital statistics. That these necessary duties have been unperformed in Alaska is proved by the fact that that country and its people are suffering from negligence in these necessary services.

I wish every Member of this House, and indeed every citizen of this country, would read the testimony of Bishop Peter T. Rowe, of the Episcopal Church, who is devoting his life to the work of relief for the sufferers in Alaska, whose testimony was given at the hearings before the Committee on the Territories January 16, 1912. Bishop Rowe told of the hardships endured by certain human beings, Indians and others, in Alaska, and of his efforts to raise funds for the establishment of hospitals in which to do the work of common civilization, as against leaving God's afflicted creatures to die from loathsome disease, neglect, and abject poverty. Remembering that such conditions are appealing for alleviation under the Stars and Stripes, I can not imagine this House hesitating for a moment to extend help.

I shall not go into the details of the bishop's testimony; they are too awful, but I will add the following from page 7 of the hearing before the Committee on the Territories on January 16, 1912:

Mr. MARTIN. To what do you attribute the diseased condition of the tribes which you state are in that condition? Is it due to association with the white men?

Bishop ROWE. In part. I think they have inherited it largely from the former conditions prevailing. It probably started under the influence of the Russians, has continually spread, and now it is largely enhanced, and all that, through the perfect ability of the Indians to get liquor.

The CHAIRMAN. You say their perfect ability to get it?

Bishop ROWE. Yes; in spite of the law.

Mr. CONNELL. That is the point I had in mind about local government. Could not that be stopped more effectively if you had it under control of the local government?

Bishop ROWE. I think so.

Mr. Chairman, give Alaska this measure of local government. I can not conceive of an agency better calculated to interest all the people of Alaska in their Territory than local government. Give the people there a government of their own, within Federal possiblities in a Territory, and you will do a nation's duty toward one of its integral parts.

I can readily see how a local government, representing the will as well as the patriotism of the people, shall become its most vigilant watcher, lest the Territory be exploited and, above all, lest the human being whose lot is cast there shall suffer neglect, to the shame of a Christian nation.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not discuss the details of the bill, these having been so well presented, both in the bill itself and during this debate. I shall vote for the passage of the measure, and earnestly plead with the House to pass the bill as it is.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, if this bill becomes a law, the Territory of Alaska will become fully organized as a Territory and will have all the branches of a government necessary to make a complete Territorial organization—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. Alaska up to this time has had no Territorial legislature, but has had a governor appointed by the President of the United States and a judicial tribunal established, but has had no legislature to pass local laws.

Upon an examination we find that Alaska was acquired from Russia by the treaty of March 30, 1867; that the United States paid as a consideration $7,200,000. As early as 1868 certain laws relating to customs, commerce, and navigation were extended over Alaska, but it was several years before any local government was established. In March, 1884, Congress passed an act providing for a civil government for Alaska, which act provided for a governor and the establishment of a United States court of general jurisdiction. From time to time Congress passed acts extending certain laws of the United States over Alaska, placing in force in Alaska a commercial and civil code.

Alaska has 590,884 square miles—almost one-fifth as large as the United States. The population of Alaska, according to the census of 1910, was 64,356. The Territory of Alaska was larger than many of the Territories when organized. The Territory of Alaska when organized had a larger population in 1910 than 14 of the Territories had when they were given an elective legislature and a larger population than 9 of the States had when they were organized and given full power as a State.

In 1890 the State of Wyoming only had a population of 60,705. It is true that in Alaska the population is scattered over a large area of country, the Territory being so large, but it has been shown that the population has been classified by judicial divisions and has been gradually increasing, as shown by the census reports since 1890.

The United States receives the benefit of the entire trade with Alaska, and the trade with Alaska is worth more than it is with many countries. In 1909 there was shipped from the United States to the different divisions of Alaska different commodities amounting to $18,923,887. In the same year, 1909, the custom reports show that the total trade with Alaska was $50,724,986. This trade, it seems to me, not only shows permanence in trade and in population, but shows that the resources are abundant, and under proper laws and regulations they would soon be largely increased. In fact, the development of Alaska is in its infancy, and no one at this time can fix a limit as to the future value or increase of the trade with Alaska.

The trade with Alaska is large and especially valuable to the United States, as every dollar of the trade that comes into the United States from Alaska is practically an American dollar, and every dollar that has gone or will go into Alaska is money that is spent by American capital.

It is clear to me and it seemed clear to the members of the committee when this bill was being considered by our committee that Alaska and her people needed a legislative body created from their own citizens with limited powers to pass laws for their own local self-government; that it would be an inducement for capital to invest and hasten the building of railroads and other public utilities in the Territory and would in a general way assist in the rapid development of the abundant resources of this great country. The most important thing to-day that Alaska needs is a home government, the right of her citizens to make laws to govern themselves, a right that all Americans enjoy and have a right to expect. The people in Alaska want Territorial government in the fullest sense. They demand the same rights that the citizens of other unorganized Territories have heretofore demanded; that is, a right to make laws, levy and collect taxes and expend the taxes for the improvement and upbuilding of public schools, public buildings, charitable institutions, municipal affairs, and for the other improvements incident to a well-organized and established government. With the increase in population in Alaska and with her unlimited resources only partly developed, why should the people of that Territory be denied the right of self-government? All must agree who have had any experience that the worst form of government a civilized people under any republican form of government can have is a bureaucratic government administered at long range, and too often by inexperienced, if not to say incompetent, men. The best way to develop a country and to build up amongst its people good citizenship is to give that people the right of local self-government and the right to make their own laws for the future development of their country.

When the people realize that they have assumed the responsibility of their own Government and that they must depend for their future advancement upon the laws made by their own citizens, you find a better class of laws and a better organized and controlled government.

Both political parties have heretofore expressed the desire to give to Alaska an organized government complete in all respects, and the time has now come when we should show our faith by our work and pass this bill. Alaska needs the legislative power to assist in developing her country, and there has already been established in its progressive towns and cities daily and weekly newspapers and other modern means of bringing the attention of the public to the magnitude of Alaska's resources and development and of her claim to a right among the States and Territories of the United States. Next to a local self-government Alaska needs more capital invested in her territory in the construction of railroads and other public utilities for transportation purposes, so that her great wealth of minerals may be placed on the market.

If you will give to Alaska a local self-government so that it may regulate its own internal affairs, it will be but a short while until there will be developed many sections of Alaska where no one at this time lives and will be populated by a class of good citizens. Under the regulation of her own laws the resources of Alaska will soon be developed and protected, and the revenues collected will be ample to maintain the Territorial government and to pay its obligations.

Alaska to-day has as great a right to Territorial government as many of the other Territories, now States, when they were organized as a Territory. I am in favor of the expenditure of the money collected for taxes in Alaska for Alaska and Alaska's citizens and stop the Federal tax gatherer in that Territory and give to Alaska her taxes, collected by officers elected by Alaska; spend them by authority of Alaskan laws passed by a legislature of Alaskan citizens elected by the legal voters of Alaska, and you will then have given to Alaskan citizens their just rights, for which they have been petitioning for many years.

I sincerely hope that Alaskans may get their just rights by unanimous vote of the House by passing this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in an article read before the American Mining Congress last fall, a distinguished gentleman from Alaska, Mr. Baldwin, of Valdez, among other things referred to a memorial presented to the Secretary of the Interior by the citizens of that town. In that memorial this statement is made, which I think largely represents the sentiment of the people of Alaska:

> Primarily, Alaska demands and needs the same right of untrammeled development that has been accorded to every other Territory of the United States pioneered by Americans. Alaskans ask that American citizens and all other industrious men be permitted to create property for themselves out of the limitless resources of this vast Territory, unhampered by bureaucratic dictation and interference. The people of Alaska are a unit in opposition to Federal landlordism over its mines, forests, and water power.

And much more of the same kind. The gentleman also stated:

> We will be satisfied with no makeshift, no halfway measure; it is our right as Americans, and it is rights we demand, and not permits and privileges that we sue for.

This bill does not quite meet the demand. How far it goes no one knows. What the people of Alaska really want is not merely a legislature, which is a sort of a toy, but the exercise of legislation which will permit the development of the natural resources of that country.

I have hoped for some years, but up to date hoped in vain, that some one would solve the problem of the conservation and the use of the natural resources of Alaska, and that we might have passed, before this, a bill concerning, not merely the land and the coal and the water power, but the other natural resources of Alaska.

The Committee on the Public Lands has jurisdiction of the lands of Alaska. They have not reported any bill, and I do not know whether they intend to. I do not know whether the intention of this bill is to confer upon the Territorial legislature control over the water power of Alaska or not. Can the gentleman say?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think not. It is a part of the public domain.

Mr. MANN. I find nothing in the bill about the public domain except the primary disposition of the soil.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The water power is a part of the soil. You can not dispose of the water power without disposing of the soil.

Mr. MANN. No; but you can pass laws regulating the water power without disposing of the soil. The bill provides that the legislature of Alaska may alter, amend, modify, or repeal the laws now in force in Alaska, except the customs laws, the internal-revenue laws, the postal laws, or other general laws of the United States. A large share of the laws that relate to everything in Alaska are special laws and not general laws.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I am not mistaken. We have repeatedly passed laws that are in force only in Alaska. Most of the general laws regulating land in the United States are not in force in Alaska. We have special laws for them, and they might not be effective; I do not know whether they would be effective or not. I do not know whether the mining laws would be effective—I do not know whether anybody else knows—under the provisions of this bill.

I do not object to the passage of the bill, although it is perfectly plain that it either will not accomplish what the people of Alaska want it to accomplish, or else it will go away beyond what Congress intends to confer upon Alaska.

I have no objection to the people of Alaska controlling themselves in the ordinary police control. That is local; but the resources of Alaska do not belong to the people who now happen to be there, most of whom are not there for their natural lives, most of whom do not intend to remain there any longer than is necessary to accumulate a little and then come back to the States. In the control of the police matters it may be fair to give them power, although everyone knows that if they were given unrestricted powers over police matters it would not be to their interest. This bill recognizes that fact by proposing to take away from them, or by not conferring upon them, the power over gambling and lotteries and things of that sort. The bill when enacted into law, and the legislature when it meets, will be a disappointment both to the people of Alaska and the Congress. It does not meet the problems which ought to be met in relation to Alaska.

Think of it. With great coal fields there, they ship coal in from outside. We have not attempted by legislation, so far, to properly meet those questions. I am not criticizing anyone, because it is a great problem, which possibly no one yet has solved. We ought to sit down seriously and solve it. Does the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] or anyone else think that we are more likely to develop the railroads in Alaska, which is a very important matter, after giving to a legislature authority over the matter? We give a legislature to Alaska, but provide in the bill that no municipal corporation may issue bonds. It can not make any improvements. The Territory can make no improvements, and having given the authority to a legislature, Congress is much less likely to make the improvements. Which would the people of Alaska prefer, to have a legislature for a toy or to have the real development which may come with a transfer of a part of the implements now upon the Panama Canal to Alaska to help develop that Territory? You may say they will get both. The chances are they will not. The two do not go together. When we give to the local legislature authority over these matters we do not pay much more attention to them. A provision in the bill, which has been frequently referred to, provides that Congress reserves the right to set aside any law that is passed. That right was reserved in connection with New Mexico and Arizona and possibly various other Territories. I have been here 15 years. I remember only one time when we set aside a law passed by the legislature of one of those Territories. It was a law that did not amount to anything, did not affect anybody, which was rushed through both Houses of Congress as though it was the most important thing in the world. It was of absolutely no importance except locally as to the location of a country or its boundaries. I think that is the only case where Congress has done anything of the sort, not because they have to approve the law, but because, having given the responsibility to the people there, they let the people exercise the responsibility, often at their own expense and to their disadvantage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that he ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the original bill, and that the substitute may be read with the right to amend the same as though it was the original bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make that request. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the original bill be dispensed with, and that the substitute be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the reading of the original bill be dispensed with, and that the substitute be read in lieu thereof.

Mr. MANN. As though it were the original bill, with the same right of amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska Territory organized.—That the territory ceded to the United States by Russia by the treaty of March 30, 1867, and known as Alaska, shall be and constitute the Territory of Alaska under the laws of the United States, the government of which shall be organized and administered as provided by said laws.

[Mr. KINDRED addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Constitution and laws of United States extended.—That the Constitution of the United States, and all the laws thereof which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory as elsewhere in the United States; that all the laws of the United States heretofore passed establishing the executive and judicial departments in Alaska shall continue in full force and effect until amended or repealed by act of Congress; that except as herein provided all laws now in force in Alaska shall continue in full force and effect until altered, amended, or repealed by Congress or by the legislature: Provided, That the authority herein granted to the legislature to alter, amend, modify, and repeal laws in force in Alaska shall not extend to the customs, internal-revenue, postal, or other general laws of the United States. And the legislature shall pass no law depriving the judges and officers of the district court of Alaska of any authority, jurisdiction, or function exercised by like judges or officers of district courts of the United States.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 9, page 23, after the word "States," insert the words "or to the game laws of the United States applicable to Alaska."

Mr. MANN. Why not make it game and fish laws?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I think the fish laws ought to be left alone.

Mr. MANN. Why not make it game and fish laws, so that they can not repeal the fish laws? They can pass new fish laws.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I will accept that amendment, and ask unanimous consent that it be so modified and reported as modified.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified, and the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 9, page 23, after the word "States," insert the words "or to the game and fish laws of the United States applicable to Alaska."

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the word "fish" ought to be in there. I think the fisheries in Alaska need protection. They belong to the people of the State or to the Territory, and they do not belong to the Government of the United States. They are not now being protected. They are not being conserved, and if this legislature will do something toward conserving and protecting the fish it ought to be allowed to do it. This simply bars the legislature from protecting the fisheries in that Territory, and it ought not to be in the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice this provision does not apply to passing laws, but only to the repealing of laws.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me the observation of the gentleman from Illinois answers the objection of the gentleman from Alaska. It simply provides, if it shall be adopted, that the legislature of the Territory of Alaska shall not have the power to alter, amend, or repeal the United States fish or game laws now in force in the Territory. It does not take away from the legislature the power to pass additional laws of that character. It seems to me that meets the objection.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think they ought to be allowed to amend them.

Mr. WILLIS. We have a Federal fish law in Alaska. The gentleman is not objecting to that.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No.

Mr. WILLIS. That is all this amendment provides—that the legislature shall not have the power to amend the present fish or game laws.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. What does that mean?

Mr. WILLIS. It means that the present law shall stand.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Suppose Congress passes a law revising and extending the fish laws there?

Mr. WILLIS. Well, undoubtedly that will be the paramount law of Alaska.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What will be the effect of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. WILLIS. The effect of this amendment will be, as I understand it, simply to take away from the legislature of Alaska the power to amend the fish or game laws now in effect in Alaska.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It would not have the effect to take away from the legislature of Alaska the power to amend the fish laws we hereafter pass.

Mr. WILLIS. No; I do not think it would, as I have worded it, although I did not have that in mind when I drafted the amendment.

Mr. MANN. They would not have that power.

Mr. WILLIS. They would not have that power now.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman is aware of the fact there is a proposition to revise the fish laws?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I think the bill is a good one and ought to pass.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. And will in all probability become the law.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me this meets the objection that has been raised in a perfectly fair manner, and I think it is a fair objection, but I do not believe the legislature ought to repeal the present game or fish laws.

Mr. MANN. We have endeavored to provide in a way for the conservation of the fisheries and game up there. We ought not to permit those laws to be repealed, but if they want to make them more stringent, and probably do, they ought to have that right.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not think the amendment means anything, but if it will please anybody to put it in, why, let it go.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I withdraw my objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The legislature.—That the legislative power and authority of said Territory shall be vested in a legislature, which shall consist of a council and a house of representatives. The council shall consist of eight members, two from each of the four judicial divisions into which Alaska is now divided by act of Congress, each of whom shall have at the time of his election the qualifications of an elector in Alaska, and shall have been a resident and an inhabitant in the division from which he is elected for at least two years prior to the date of his election. The term of office of each member of the council shall be four years: Provided, That immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election they shall, by lot or drawing, be divided in each division into two classes; the seats of the members of the first class shall be vacated at the end of two years and the seats of the members of the second class shall be vacated at the end of four years, so that one member of the council shall, after the first election, be elected biennially at the regular election from each division. The house of representatives shall consist of 16 members, 4 from each of the 4 judicial divisions into which Alaska is now divided by act of Congress. The term of office of each representative shall be for two years; and each person shall possess the same qualifications as prescribed for members of council. The persons having the highest number of legal votes in each of said council districts for members of the council shall be declared elected, and the persons having the highest number of legal votes for the house of representatives shall be declared elected: Provided, That in case two or more persons voted for have an equal number of votes, and in case a vacancy otherwise occurs in either branch of the legislature the governor shall order a new election. That each member of the legislative assembly shall be paid by the United States the sum of $15 per day for each day's attendance while the legislative assembly is in session, and mileage, in addition, at the rate of 15 cents per mile for each mile from his home to the capital and return by the nearest traveled route, and no more.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia—I want to confess my stupidity here and I would like to ask the gentleman to relieve it. Why does the United States Government pay these members of the legislature?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, it has been the custom in every Territory that we have had for the United States Government to pay the salaries of the members of the legislature.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not criticizing the custom, but I am endeavoring to learn. I understand that has been the practice in all the Territorial organizations we have made.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; in all the Territorial legislatures.

Mr. BUTLER. To pay the members of the legislature out of the Treasury, and that is upon the theory——

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That it is an aid to this Congress in governing the Territory.

Mr. BUTLER. And this is no variation from the rule that has always been practiced?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The United States Government paid the per diem of the members of the Territorial legislatures of Arizona and New Mexico up to the very day that they became States, and every other Territory. Mr. Chairman, the word "council" as it appears in this section ought to be "senate," and I move where the word "council" appears in that section that the word "senate" be substituted in its place.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman he make the motion as to one place, and if it carries, ask unanimous consent that wherever the word "council" appears in the bill it be changed to the word "senate."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If that pleases the gentleman better.

Mr. MANN. It runs all through the bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not understand that it does.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and the former bill in some places had the word "council" and in some places had the word "senate."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that, on page 23, line 15, section 4, the word "council" be stricken out and the word "senate" be substituted therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 15, strike out the word "council" and insert the word "senate" in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Now, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that wherever the word "council" occurs in the bill that the word "senate" be substituted in its place.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that wherever the word "council" appears in the bill that the word "senate" shall be substituted in its stead. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand those who will be qualified to vote under the provisions of the bill are those who are now qualified to vote for Delegate to this Congress?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Exactly.

Mr. BUTLER. And that qualification is provided by an act of Congress?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on page 24, line 21, I move to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 21, strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "ten" in lieu thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can see no reason for paying $15 a day to a member of the Territorial legislature. Ten dollars is twice as much as has ever been paid to any member of any other Territorial legislature in the United States, I guess. And they are paid traveling expenses and per diem in addition to this amount. Why should we fix such an exorbitant amount?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, when I first saw that this bill provided a per diem of $15 for members of the legislature it impressed me just as it has impressed the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but upon investigation of conditions in Alaska I learned that everything there is double the price that it is in the Territories that we have had in this country and what it is in the States. Living is very high and everything is expensive. Labor is very high. A laborer will get $7 or $8 a day, and a legislator ought to be worth as much as a placer miner.

Mr. BUTLER. As two laborers.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He ought to be worth as much as one laborer. The laborers get $7 or $8 a day and their board. When the legislators will have paid their board, and at the rate it is at Juneau, they will not have much left.

Mr. BUTLER. Did not the gentleman ascertain in the hearing the price of board in Juneau?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I heard it was very high.

Mr. BUTLER. Did you learn the figures?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We did not. Something was said about the price of eggs and of other articles to eat, but I do not remember any testimony as to the cost of board per month.

Mr. MANN. We have heard a good deal from the gentleman about the agricultural resources of Alaska. Let them be developed.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. You have not developed them. You have put a reservation all over the agricultural land in Alaska, and it is not developed and can not be developed until this policy is changed.

Mr. MANN. There is plenty of land that can be developed there. Five dollars a day is the usual price, and I think in some places the legislators have been paid less than that. Here is a proposition to pay $15 a day—the highest that has ever been paid, I think, and during the winter months when these gentlemen are not busy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The bill provides the legislature shall be in session for 60 days every two years. There are 24 members, and gentlemen of this committee can see what a small amount is involved. The evidence before our committee was that $15 a day would not be more than is paid to the miners up in that country.

Mr. BUTLER. Sixty days in two years?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. They can not stay longer than 60 days?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No. Fifteen dollars a day in Alaska is not as much as $5 a day in Illinois. At $15 a day the Alaskan legislator will get $900 in two years; in the gentleman's State they get $1,000 a year. In some States the legislators get quite a good salary; in my State they do not get very much; but $15 a day in Alaska will be small pay, and I hope the House will not change this.

Mr. MANN. This will remain some time after it becomes a law. I think $15 a day is exceedingly high now. If these gentlemen are going to get the benefit from this law that they say they are going to get, there will be an influx of people up there and rates will not be so high.

Mr. WHITE and Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska rose.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. My time has expired, but I will answer a question of the gentleman.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Or the gentleman from Alaska?

Mr. WHITE. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] if it is not a fact that living is not so much higher along the coast, where Juneau is, than on the western coast of the United States?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That was not the information that our committee had.

Mr. WHITE. I am quite sure that it is a fact that it is a very small percentage more, but it increases very largely as you get into the interior. However, in regard to the question of the gentleman from Illinois, after having spent some time in Alaska, I would say that $15 is not too large a sum to give these members of the legislature. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that some good price must be given to them, not that they lack in loyalty to the country, but because of the conditions up there. I suspect that if a stampede somewhere in that country were inaugurated about the time of the meeting of the legislature, it would take a good big price to hold them to the capital.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the Delegate from Alaska whether the per diem covers the mileage, or whether the mileage is provided for separately?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mileage is provided for separately.

If the House will let me have a word on this matter, I will say it is true that $15 a day seems a good deal to gentlemen down here who are receiving $25 a day for performing no better service and the same kind of service that these men would perform in the Territory.

If they can not earn $15 a day in the same kind of work in the Territory of Alaska they would be very poor members of the legislative body. They have only 60 days' service in two years, and that is only $900 each, and they have got to cross that country four or five hundred miles to get to the capital. That will be 15 cents a mile, but it would not pay the bill; and no man can go to the legislature and not be compelled to spend twice the sum he will get out of this mileage proposed. It is not excessive. In fact, it is not half enough. It is a very small sum when you consider that they have only 60 days of service and that it may take them 10 or 15 or 20 days to come and go.

Mr. MANN. For which they receive 30 cents a mile.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. And for which you in Illinois pay $1,000 per annum.

Mr. MANN. We do not pay it out of the General Treasury.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; but the Federal Treasury should be as generous as the State of Illinois.

Mr. COOPER. I may say that it also appeared by the recent investigation into the affairs of the State Legislature of Illinois that a large percentage of the members of that legislature did not pay anything for mileage at all. They traveled on passes all the time.

Mr. MANN. They do not get 15 cents a mile.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The legislature in Alaska will cost only $24,000 in two years.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but I may say to the gentleman that I have wards in my district that contain twice the population of all Alaska—wards merely—and we would consider it grossly extravagant to pay at that rate.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have no doubt it would be, in that place.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman makes his figures on the basis of what Members of Congress receive. One reason why we pay ourselves reasonable salaries is to keep down other expenses. When we do not do it we do not earn our salaries. Of course this may be the last Territorial legislature that will be organized for some time, but there can be absolutely no excuse for gross extravagance in the organization of the Territory up there. Ten dollars a day and how much mileage? Because the mileage will be a considerable sum for the long distances.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Fifteen cents a mile.

Mr. MANN. Fifteen cents a mile, each way.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The total mileage for all the members for the two years will amount to $5,994.

Mr. MANN. What is the farthest distance any one of them has to travel?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The farthest distance is 2,000 miles, from Nome.

Mr. MANN. Six hundred dollars—a pretty high rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 11, noes 27.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Election of members of the legislature.—That the first election for members of the Legislature of Alaska shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1912, and all subsequent elections for the election of such members shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November biennially thereafter; that the qualifications of electors, the regulations governing the creation of voting precincts, the appointment and qualifications of election officers, the supervision of elections, the giving of notices thereof, the forms of ballots, the register of votes, the challenging of voters, and the returns and the canvass of the returns of the result of all such elections for members of the legislature shall be the same as those prescribed in the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the Territory of Alaska," approved May 7, 1906, and all the provisions of said act which are applicable are extended to said elections for members of the legislature, and shall govern the same, and the canvassing board created by said act shall canvass the returns of such elections and issue certificates of election to each member elected to the said legislature; and all the penal provisions contained in section 15 of the said act shall apply to elections for members of the legislature as fully as they now apply to elections for Delegate from Alaska to the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 26, line 2, by inserting after the word "Representatives" the following: "Provided, however, That section 3 of said act, entitled 'An act providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the Territory of Alaska,' approved May 7, 1906, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. That all citizens of the United States, 21 years of age and over, who are actual and bona fide residents of Alaska, and who have been such residents continuously during the entire year immediately preceding the election, and who have been such residents continuously for 30 days next preceding the election in the precinct in which they vote, shall be qualified to vote for the election of a Delegate from Alaska.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes a change in the existing election law of Alaska, to strike out, before the word "citizens," the word "male."

Mr. BUTLER. Is not this rather sudden? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FLOOD of Virginia) there were—ayes 26, noes 26.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MANN and Mr. FLOOD of Virginia.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object, but one word will tell more than the reading of the amendment. The amendment changes the qualifications of electors in Alaska by striking out, before the word "citizens," the word "male."

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it to provide votes for women in Alaska?

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 41.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if we can not have some arrangement about a uniform date for elections in Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Make them all in November.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Has the gentleman from Illinois any amendment to offer on that?

Mr. MANN. It was proposed to change from November to August. I do not pretend to know which is the more desirable date.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the gentleman will offer an amendment to change from August to November, for the election of Delegate, the committee will accept it.

Mr. MANN. That can be inserted when we reach it at the proper place in the bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. Organization of the legislature.—That when the legislature shall convene under the law, the council and house of representatives shall each organize by the election of one of their number as speaker, and by the election by each body of the subordinate officers provided for in section 1861 of the United States Revised Statutes of 1878, and each of said subordinate officers shall receive the compensation provided in that section: Provided, That no person shall be employed for whom salary, wages, or compensation is not provided in the estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury and included in the appropriation made by Congress.

LEGISLATURE FOR ALASKA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask in reference to the subordinate officers provided in section 1861 of the Revised Statutes, which I have before me. I notice that in section 16 there is a provision that the laws passed by the legislature shall be transmitted to the various persons certified to by the chief clerk of each house. I do not know what the practice has been in the past about Territorial legislatures, but apparently, under section 1861, the clerks can not be employed after the legislature adjourns. I do not know how you would get them to certify to the laws unless you paid them for it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I took these provisions out of the general act.

Mr. MANN. Out of what general act?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Out of the general organic laws of other Territories. I think that ought to be amended to give these clerks extra compensation.

Mr. MANN. The chief clerk under this act gets $8 a day, other clerks get $5 a day. Under the statement made by the distinguished chairman of the committee of course none of them can live there on that pay, because the boarding expense is $8 to $10 a day, and common laborers get $8.50 a day.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the gentleman will offer an amendment increasing the per diem pay of these clerks we will accept it.

Mr. MANN. I am simply calling the attention of the committee to these things, and particularly whether the chief clerk can be paid after the session ends when he is required to go over the laws and certify them.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Like the clerks of many legislatures, he is the keeper of the rolls. He has a per diem, and he would perform certain functions after the legislature adjourns.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether a chief clerk, employed for 60 days, would be willing to work 90 days for nothing because he was getting $8 a day—less than a common laborer—for the 60 days he was employed.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think we had better amend the section and give these clerks a larger per diem.

Mr. MANN. Now, I want to ask the gentleman in reference to the provision on page 27, same section. It says:

No person shall be employed for whom salary, wages, or compensation is not provided in the estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury and included in the appropriation made by Congress.

Why should we provide that we can not appropriate for any officers connected with the Territorial legislature unless the Secretary of the Treasury sends in an estimate for it?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. If the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. On page 34, in line 12, it is provided that these laws passed by the legislature shall be forwarded to the President and certified to by the chief clerk of the house. Now, that can be cured by providing that the certification shall be by the secretary of the Territory, and if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MANN. I think that is better.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is intended in the case of the senate that the presiding officer shall be designated as speaker?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No senate in history has a presiding officer called the speaker. It seems to me that that ought to be changed.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is a mere question of verbiage.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 20, page 26, that the word "speaker" be stricken out and the words "presiding officer" be inserted.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That will not do.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If this amendment is agreed to, I then propose to add, by another amendment, the words "who shall be designated as speaker in the case of the house and as president in the case of the senate."

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman offer it as one amendment?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will offer it as an amendment all together. Mr. Chairman, I will put it in writing and offer it later.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out on page 27, lines 2 and 3, the words "in the estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury and included."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "in the estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury and included."

Mr. MANN. That will leave the matter so that it will read:

Provided, That no person shall be employed for whom salary, wages, or compensation are not provided in the appropriation—leaving to Congress to determine whether it will make the appropriation and not the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is all right and we accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have not quite finished the amendment I propose to offer, and I ask unanimous consent that this section be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the section will be passed without prejudice at the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. Legislative power—limitations.—The legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the lands or other property of nonresidents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents; nor shall the legislature grant to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise without the affirmative approval of Congress; nor shall the legislature pass local or special laws in any of the cases enumerated in the act of July 30, 1886; nor shall it grant private charters or special privileges, but it may, by general act, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for manufacturing, mining, agricultural, and other industrial pursuits, and for the conducting of business of insurance, savings banks, banks of discount and deposit (but not of issue), loans, trust, and guaranty associations, for the establishment and conduct of cemeteries, and for the construction and operation of railroads, wagon roads, vessels, and irrigating ditches, and the colonization and improvement of lands in connection therewith, or for colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries, or any other benevolent, charitable, or scientific association; no divorce shall be granted by the legislature, nor shall any divorce be granted by the courts of the Territory, unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in the Territory for two years next preceding the application; nor shall any lottery or the sale of lottery tickets be allowed; nor shall the legislature or any municipality interfere with or attempt in any wise to limit the acts of Congress to prevent and punish gambling, and all gambling implements shall be seized by the United States marshal or any of his deputies, or any constable or police officer, and destroyed; nor shall spirituous or intoxicating liquors be sold, except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress shall provide; nor shall any public money be appropriated by the Territory or any municipal corporation therein for the support or benefit of any sectarian, denominational, or private school, or any school not under the exclusive control of the Government; nor shall the government of the Territory of Alaska or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision of the Territory make any subscription to the capital stock of any incorporated company, or in any manner lend its credit for the use thereof; nor shall the Territory, or any municipal corporation therein, have power or authority to create or assume any bonded indebtedness whatever; nor to borrow money in the name of the Territory or of any municipal division thereof; nor to pledge the faith of the people of the same for any loan whatever, either directly or indirectly; nor to create, nor to assume, any indebtedness, except for the actual running expenses thereof; and no such indebtedness for actual running expenses shall be created or assumed in excess of the actual income of the Territory or municipality for that year, including as a part of such income appropriations then made by Congress, and taxes levied and payable and applicable to the payment of such indebtedness and cash and other money credits on hand and applicable and not already pledged for prior indebtedness: Provided, That all indebtedness incurred, or warrants or other evidences of indebtedness issued, shall be paid in the order of creation; and all taxes shall be equal and uniform, and no distinction shall be made in the assessments between different kinds of property, but the assessments shall be according to the value thereof. No tax shall be levied for Territorial purposes in excess of 1 per cent upon the assessed valuation of property therein in any one year; nor shall any incorporated town or municipality levy any tax, for any purpose, in excess of 2 per cent of the assessed valuation of property within the town in any one year: Provided, That the Congress reserves the exclusive power for five years from the date of the approval of this act to fix and impose any tax or taxes upon railways or railway property in Alaska, and no act or laws passed by the Legislature of Alaska providing for a county form of government therein shall have any force or effect until it shall be submitted to and approved by the affirmative action of Congress; and all laws passed, or attempted to be passed, by such legislature in said Territory inconsistent with the provisions of this section shall be utterly null and void.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I now offer an amendment to section 7, which section we have passed, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 20, amend by striking out the word "speaker" and insert in lieu thereof the words "presiding officer, who shall be designated in the case of the senate as president of the senate, and in the case of the house of representatives as speaker of the house of representatives."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 8, page 27, line 11, for the purpose of offering an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to section 8, page 27, line 11, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "object," in line 11, page 27, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "subject."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 11, strike out the word "object" and insert in lieu thereof the word "subject."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 17, after the word "void," insert: "Provided, That the assessed valuation shall be based on actual value."

Mr. MANN. I think that is already in that section.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I think it is not.

Mr. MANN. In lines 1 and 2, page 30, there is the language:

But the assessments shall be according to the value thereof.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that that covers it?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. I shall offer an amendment to insert the word "actual" before the word "value" there. I think that word ought to be there. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which I have just sent to the desk and which has been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I now move to amend by inserting the word "actual" before the word "value," line 2, page 30.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 2, insert before the word "value," the word "actual."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 17, after the word "application," insert: "Nor for any cause except adultery or extreme and repeated cruelty."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, one of the scandals in connection with the administration or the maladministration of justice in our country has been the freedom of obtaining divorces in some of the States and Territories. The amendment which I have offered proposes to limit the right of the Territorial legislature in authorizing a law to grant divorces, so that divorces may not be granted for any reason except adultery or extreme and repeated cruelty.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will be voted down. There is no reason why any such law as this should be passed as to Alaska. There has been no abuse of divorce laws in Alaska, and I see no reason why we should incorporate such a provision in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there has been no abuse of the divorce laws in Alaska. There has been no possibility of abuse of divorce laws in Alaska. Let us hope there will be no abuse of divorce laws in Alaska, but we know there has been the greatest abuse of divorce laws in some of our States and Territories, and there is now. We have restricted the power of this legislature over various things, including lotteries and gaming, and it does not seem to me to be any invidious distinction to provide against granting divorces in Alaska, say, for instance, for desertion. I do not believe that we ought to allow the legislature of Alaska to say that a man may come to Alaska, tell his wife to come with him, have her decline to come, and then after he has been there for a year get a divorce upon the ground of desertion. I think we ought to guard against that. I do not see how anybody can defend a proposition of that sort. It is no reflection upon the legislature, and only one addition to a number of restrictions already contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 25, noes 36.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-four gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The doors will be closed and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and Mr. SHERLEY having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CLINE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 38, and finding itself without a quorum, he ordered the roll to be called, that 234 Members answered to their names, and he reported back to the House the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee having found itself without a quorum, he ordered the roll to be called, whereupon 234 Members answered to their names—a quorum. The absentees will be noted upon the record and the committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the committee resumed its session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the bill provides "nor shall any divorce be granted by the courts of the Territory unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in the Territory for two years next preceding the application," and the amendment which I have offered provides "nor for any cause except adultery or extreme and repeated cruelty," which would confine the granting of divorce under the laws to be passed by the Territorial legislature to the two causes named, which, if I remember correctly, are the causes now in force in the District under an act of Congress.

We have provided in the District of Columbia that causes for divorce shall be adultery or extreme and repeated cruelty. We think we ought to make the same provision in reference to Alaska, so that there shall never arise the scandal in regard to granting divorces for desertion after people move to the Territory which has arisen in some of the Territories and, I regret to say, in some of the States of the Union.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out after the words in the bill:

No divorce shall be granted by the courts in the Territory.

I offer it by way of substitute for the amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk shall report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute by striking out, in lines 15 and 16, the following: "Unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in the Territory for two years next preceding the application——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina is not a substitute by way of amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. I offer it by way of substitute.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order that it is not in any way a substitute. My amendment is to insert a provision in the bill. The gentleman offers an amendment to strike something out of the bill that is not in it.

Mr. FINLEY. I offer it by way of amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides in reference to divorces. Now, I have offered to insert after the word "application" certain language.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will indulge me one moment, in view of his proposition that his amendment is by way of perfecting the text, I withdraw my amendment and will offer it later.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will not be adopted. The gentleman says he wishes to avoid the scandals that have occurred in certain States of the Union by reason of people going temporarily to these States and securing divorces. This bill, as reported from the committee and as now pending, provides that no divorce shall be granted in Alaska until the party asking for it shall have been a resident of Alaska for two years. That answers the first argument of the gentleman.

As to the limitations of the grounds of divorce, I think they are unwise. The fact that Congress passed such a law for the District of Columbia does not necessarily make it wise. It has never passed it for any other district or Territory in the country. At present divorces can be granted in Alaska for the following reasons:

1. Impotency existing at the time of the marriage and continuing to the commencement of the action.
2. Adultery.
3. Conviction of felony.
4. Willful desertion for a period of two years.
5. Cruel and inhuman treatment calculated to impair health and endanger life.
6. Habitual gross drunkenness contracted since marriage and continued for one year prior to the commencement of the action.

It does not seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that a question of this character should be taken up and disposed of in the time in which we have to consider a general legislative bill for Alaska. If there are dangers in the divorce evil, as claimed by the gentleman from Illinois—and I agree with him that there has been great abuse in certain States—we had better take up this general divorce law and amend it, after having duly considered the amendments.

I do not think the limitations which the gentleman from Illinois offers are wise. There are other grounds than adultery and cruelty that should be reasons for a divorce. Desertion certainly should be one. But even if the contentions of the gentleman are correct it would be wiser to let this matter be dealt with in some other bill than in this legislative act.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Allow me to make the suggestion further that if this passes in this way and becomes a law the husband or wife that is convicted of a felony could not be divorced.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly. A husband who deserts his wife and stays away from her for 5 or 10 or 15 years, with never any intention of returning, would be immune from the law and the wife would have no remedy whatever. There are a number of causes which in the wisdom of the legislature of a Territory would be sufficient to justify its courts in granting divorces that we ought not to cut off from consideration. I do not think it is wise in enacting an organic law for the people of Alaska to hedge them about with limitations of this kind, and deny them and their legislature the right that has been extended to every other Territorial legislature in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. I want to move to strike out the words "and repeated" in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not observe the gentleman from Alabama standing. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "and repeated."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 28, line 15, by striking out, after the word "Territory," the words "unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in the Territory for two years next preceding the application."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 28, line 15, by striking out, after the word "Territory," the words "unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in the Territory for two years next preceding the application."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, if there is one question that is of greater moment and greater importance to the people of the United States to-day, that is of greater moment to the civilization of this country than any other, it is the question of divorce.

I know that divorces are granted in a great majority of the countries of the world. Everybody knows that. But what are the results? How does it affect home life, the family, and so on? In the opinion of millions of people it affects the home, civilization, and the family for evil. In South Carolina no divorce can be obtained for any cause, and I defy the man to stand up here and challenge the civilization of South Carolina from the standpoint of home, of family, of virtue, and morality. [Applause.]

The man who would stand here and cast any aspersion upon the State of South Carolina on any of those grounds would not be speaking the truth. I say that woman in South Carolina stands upon a plane as high as man can place her, and it follows that her civilization is secure. I assert that this is true because in the State of South Carolina there is no divorce law. You can get married there; yes. Once in awhile, but very rarely, somebody will suffer; somebody will be unfortunate. But these cases are exceedingly rare. You can take an isolated case here and there, but the instances are so few that the good results that come from there being no divorce law in the State outweigh ten thousand times the evils that can be complained of on the ground that there is no divorce law in South Carolina.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Has there been any substantial demand in South Carolina for a change in the divorce laws of the State?

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that the sentiment of South Carolina is unanimous that there should be no divorce law in the State. There is no demand for one.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. That was my understanding.

Mr. FINLEY. Absolutely none.

We are here legislating for a Territory. The Congress is called upon to pass a fundamental law for the Territory of Alaska. This is the last Territory, I believe, that we have, so let us make a model law for Alaska. Let us say to the people of Alaska, to the people of the United States, and all the world that on this question we will take high ground and legislate in such a way for Alaska that there will be no scandalous divorce proceedings, breaking up homes and families, and undermining our civilization—evils which, if they continue as they have existed and as they have grown in the last three decades, will undermine the institutions of this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I hope the committee will vote down the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina. No one here could or would say aught in detraction of the splendid civilization of South Carolina; but we must remember that there are 47 other States in this Union, with as high a civilization as South Carolina, and the civilization and wisdom of those 47 States have led to a different conclusion on this subject from that of South Carolina. They have taken a different view of this question; and in this bill we are crystallizing the wisdom of 47 States against that of the one.

Mr. FINLEY. And the 47 are wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FINLEY) there were—ayes 50, noes 71.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 30, line 17, by inserting the following:
"Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held to abrogate the right of the legislature to modify the qualifications of electors by extending the elective franchise to women."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the Committee of the Whole—very unwisely, in my opinion—voted down by a tie vote an amendment which would have been of very great value to Alaska, an amendment giving the better half of the population of Alaska the right to vote. [Applause.] While the committee made that mistake, I do not think the committee is prepared to make the further mistake, in granting this limited form of self-government to Alaska, of so legislating that the people of Alaska themselves can not call to their aid in legislation and administration the most virtuous and intelligent half of their population. [Applause.]

My amendment simply provides that the people of Alaska shall have the power to dispose of this matter as they think fit—may grant the elective franchise to women. If they desire to do so, it simply enlarges the scope of the self-government provided for by the act.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is nothing in this bill to prevent the legislature of Alaska from passing such an act and submitting it to Congress if it desires to do so, so there is no use in adopting this amendment, and I am opposed to injecting the question of woman suffrage into the bill providing a Territorial legislature for the people of Alaska.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will kindly turn to section 5, he will discover that the qualifications of electors are fixed by this legislation, and there is no authority given the legislature of Alaska to change those qualifications in any wise, unless we grant the right provided in this amendment. As the matter now stands in the bill, Alaska has no control whatever over the question of the qualifications of electors. This amendment would give them the right to change those qualifications, so far as extending the franchise to women is concerned.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The statement I made was that there was nothing in this law to prevent the legislature of Alaska from petitioning Congress to pass a law of this kind.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, there is nothing to prevent that legislature petitioning Congress to repeal the Constitution of the United States, for that matter.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This bill does not change the qualifications of electors from what they are in the existing law. There is nothing in the pending bill that changes the qualifications of electors from existing law. If Congress wants to go into the question of female suffrage at any time, it can take up the existing law and change it. I do not think we ought to.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a proposition to give the people of Alaska the opportunity to take up the question of whether or not they desire to extend the franchise to women. Does the gentleman believe in local self-government?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman desire to withhold from the people of Alaska the opportunity to extend the franchise?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not.

Mr. MONDELL. Then vote for my amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the gentleman from Wyoming had been as much interested in giving the people of Alaska local self-government for the last 10 years, when the Republican Party was in power, as he seems to be now, they would have had it.

I say there is no occasion to burden this bill with amendments of this character. The people of Alaska, through their legislature, can petition Congress to make this change if they wish to. This bill does not deny to the people of Alaska that right. It does not change the qualifications of electors in Alaska.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Virginia think, in the face of the fact that the House has already voted against the proposition granting woman suffrage, presented by a Member of the House, that it would pay any attention to a request made by the legislature of Alaska?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I hope it would not. I do not think the people of Alaska would make such a request.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the gentleman from Virginia is against woman suffrage?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am unqualifiedly against it.

[Mr. MACON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, when the matter came up in reading section 5 of the bill, I was called out to a committee room. I intended to offer the following amendment, to follow the word "legislature," line 22, page —, of the bill, to read as follows:

Provided, That all male and female citizens of the United States, residents of Alaska, having the qualifications specified in section 3 of said act of May 7, 1906, shall be qualified electors at that election under the provisions of this act.

I find section 3 of the act of May 7, 1906, reads as follows:

That all male citizens of the United States 21 years of age and over, who are actual and bona fide residents of Alaska and who have been such residents continually during the entire year immediately preceding the election and who have been such residents continually for 30 days next preceding the election in the precinct in which they vote, shall be qualified to vote for Delegates for Alaska.

The provision of the bill and act will leave it entirely with Congress to take it out of the hands of the legislature of Alaska, if this bill passes, in relation to giving women a vote. I will now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware that when section 5 of the bill was reached—the proper place for an amendment of this kind—I offered an amendment such as the gentleman now suggests, and it was twice lost on a tie vote because the gentleman was not here?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am here now, and here for the purpose of speaking in behalf of the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and in behalf of the proposed amendment by myself. It has been stated upon the floor of this House that this is legislation for the purpose of giving the citizens of Alaska an opportunity for self-government and allow all to participate in such government, that they might pass laws to govern themselves; and yet, while you are asking us to adopt such a law by this bill, you exclude one-half of the qualified citizens as voters—citizens who should be undoubtedly permitted to vote and to pass upon such legislation as should be passed in Alaska.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the State of California has already adopted a constitutional amendment giving women the right to vote. As a result of that, instead of the back rooms of old buildings and undesirable places being used as voting places, since that time we have found that the schoolhouses, the best rooms in the town, are prepared for the use of our voters, and our women vote; and they are taking an active and earnest interest and are making an honest effort in behalf of passing proper legislation, electing the best-qualified persons for office, and in making better laws, so that the people living under those laws might have a better opportunity, that the children may be provided with better conditions, and that better laws may be passed for the regulation of schools and the sanitary conditions of towns, better water systems may be installed, and that the people may be in a better position generally. The purpose of passing this bill is to give 40,000 people the right to govern themselves, and yet, at the very moment of passing it, you deny 20,000 citizens of that country the right to participate in the elections of the country and to say who shall be their officers and what laws shall be passed.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Have they had any elections in California since the granting of suffrage to women in that State?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; we have had many of them.

Mr. BARTLETT. Has the State had an election upon the whisky question lately?

Mr. RAKER. We have voted on all questions.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the State of California went wet, I believe, upon that vote?

Mr. RAKER. The State did not vote upon this question. There never has been any vote taken upon it except in the counties and the districts; and besides, that is no excuse for denying citizens the opportunity to vote. I want to say further upon the general subject of extending the right of the franchise to women that——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

[Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, in order to shorten time, I wish to ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen here coming from woman's-suffrage States be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. I mean those who are making their speeches for home consumption.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from New York I desire to state that what I have to say is for his benefit, and not for my own use in the State of California. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Oh, put it in the RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. The State of California, as the Members know, has adopted woman's suffrage. I was for equal suffrage before election as well as after election, and I worked for it because I believed in it. Woman's suffrage in California has convincingly demonstrated its usefulness and its value to the people. I am in favor of the amendment offered, for I believe we should have equal suffrage in every State and Territory of the United States. This afternoon when this subject first came up I had the pleasure of voting for it, and later the honor of being the first man to pass between the tellers and have my vote counted for woman's suffrage. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of women's suffrage [applause], and for two fundamental reasons. The first is because I believe that the political conditions of the world need the benefit of the exercise of political power by these specialists in the field where woman is a specialist. The laws on the statute books of the world to-day are woefully lacking in dealing with questions that bear upon child life, upon public morals, upon public health. The great reforms so urgently needed for the betterment of the conditions of living of the masses must look to woman's emancipation for their fulfillment.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOBSON. I have but five minutes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Just one question. Does the gentleman expect if ladies were elected to Congress that they would vote for battleships?

Mr. HOBSON. I believe as compared with the gentleman from New York they would show a commendable intelligence and patriotism on such questions. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Chairman, man is engaged chiefly in business, in dealing with questions of property, questions of commerce, and the like, and the statutes and the laws of the world are confined in large measure to those matters and are largely deficient in dealing with questions relating to life itself, the home, the welfare of the child, conditions of health, the morals of the community, and even education. We find ample provisions of law for dealing with cholera in hogs or foot-and-mouth disease in cattle, but there is nothing to reach infant mortality and little to reach child labor, debauchery, and moral obliquity. To get these questions properly dealt with in the statutes and the laws of the world we must invoke the political aid of that part of humanity that gives daily attention to those matters.

The second fundamental reason is this: Self-government is a trait that is evolved in humanity. Humanity does not escape the great law of heredity that governs the rest of creation. If you want to create a great pacer, you look to the development of the mother of the pacer as much as and even more than to the development of the father. If we wish to produce a race of men of the highest capacity for self-government, of the highest wisdom in politics, we must see that those faculties involved in government and in politics are developed in the women of the race. Historically the great achievements of the ages have not been by men alone, but have been by men whose women were with the men in the field of achievement. [Applause.]

The Roman Empire was overthrown by the women of the Gauls, who went with their husbands, their fathers, their sons, their brothers, and who stayed with them, gathering the powers of conquest in their own brains and their own hearts and their own blood, and giving birth to the race of warriors that finally conquered Rome. For any other great race achievement in the world the scientific way to get the highest and best results is to develop the qualities required in the mothers of the men. We are weak in the development of our men wherever we are weak in the development of our women. If we would have a race and a nation capable of the highest forms of self-government and containing the greatest wisdom in public affairs, we must overcome the weakness along these lines of our average heredity, the weakness in the political development of the mothers of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. BERGER rose.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Give us a little more time.

Mr. BERGER. All I want is five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What I am trying to arrange is for the time.

Mr. MANN. I want five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. There are four or five gentlemen who desire to talk. Can you make it 25 minutes?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We are compelled to pass this bill this afternoon.

Mr. MONDELL. We will do that.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We will not do it if we keep on talking. I move that all debate on the pending amendment close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that all debate on the pending amendment close in 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have often observed that many who profess having the highest regard for women are most afraid that women should exert their influence in public affairs; but the question, Mr. Chairman, at this time before this House is not the question of woman suffrage. On the contrary, the question is simply that of local self-government, and that is all we are voting on now. It is a question that ought not to be determined by the ideas of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON], or even of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], no matter whether I or others agree with them. The question ought to be determined by the inhabitants of Alaska, those who are qualified under this law to vote and determine it. It is so determined in every State.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment? I will say to him that there are a great many powers that this bill could confer upon the legislature of Alaska, which it has not done, which would go to make up local self-government, but we restricted the powers we confer upon it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is very true; but this is one which, above all, ought to be conferred on the people of that Territory. [Applause.] They know for themselves whether the influence of women will be for good or for bad, and they ought to have the privilege of determining it. I do not, by anything I say, intend to express any approval or disapproval of the general principles implied in women exercising the function of the ballot. That is not the question now to be determined. The other powers which have been conferred by this bill can not be properly exercised unless the inhabitants of Alaska also have this privilege which is sought to be conferred by this amendment. And that is all the House should consider at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized for three minutes only.

Mr. BERGER. I would like five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I would like the Chair to call me down at the end of three minutes, if I do not stop before.

Mr. Chairman, when the section of this bill which relates to the qualifications of electors was reached I offered an amendment amending the law now on the statute books and fixing the qualifications of electors so as to strike out the word "male," which would have conferred the right of the elective franchise upon both men and women. That motion was lost by a tie vote on a division and by a tie vote by tellers, the last vote that could be obtained in the Committee of the Whole.

I have heard three gentlemen of the House already apologize for not being here, two of them sent here by women's votes, or two men who hope to be returned by women's votes.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I will not. I have only three minutes.

Now, if these gentlemen had been here when this provision of the bill was reached and voted for the amendment, it would have prevailed. [Applause.]

I appreciate the desire of the gentlemen to apologize for their absence. I hope that in the future, if they endeavor to represent the women of their States, they will be "on the job" when the question comes up and have no occasion for offering an apology.

But the House, having had a tie vote, at that time declined to insert that provision in the bill directly, and I made a point of no quorum and obtained the presence of more Members of the House, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has now offered an amendment to let the legislature of Alaska give the right of franchise to women.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. MANN. I can not yield. I have only three minutes' time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RAKER. Just for a question.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I will yield to the gentleman. The gentleman forces me to yield. By the time I have yielded I suppose my time will have expired.

Mr. RAKER. The call of the House was on another proposition altogether, not upon the vote.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman need to tell the House that? Everybody in the House knows it and the RECORD shows it. I made the point of no quorum to bring the House here, because I knew the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] proposed to offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BERGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, it is quite remarkable that the people of the fifth district of Wisconsin, covering a part of the city of Milwaukee, are so progressive as to send the first Socialist to Congress. I am proud that I have the honor to represent them. I am proud of Milwaukee.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] for three reasons.

The first reason is that women are entitled to the franchise as a matter of justice, not because women will elevate politics. They have not elevated politics in Colorado. They have not done so in Wyoming. They are the mainstay of Mormonism in Utah and in Idaho. [Laughter.]

But I favor the amendment as a matter of justice. While they have not elevated politics, as voters they are, after all, fully as good as men. And women are not making any worse a job of it where they have a vote than the men do where men alone vote. [Applause.]

My second reason is a political reason. I favor woman suffrage as a matter of democracy. Women form a part of our population—fully one-half of the adult population. They are folks, like men. They ought to have the same rights and the same privileges as men. All just government is founded on the consent of the governed. We can not have a free country, we can not claim to have a real democracy, as long as fully one-half of the citizens of the country are disfranchised. To paraphrase a sentence of Abraham Lincoln: "A country can not endure that is half free and half not free."

But there is also one more reason, and that is an economic reason.

In former days, especially among Germans, the good hausfrau—the housewife—was the ideal woman. In the days of our fathers and grandfathers the woman, the housewife, had nothing else to do—could do nothing else—than take care of the family, the kitchen, and the household. That time is passed, especially in large cities. Women now must go out into the world and work. They have to support themselves, and very often they also must help to support their family. Women work in stores, offices, schoolrooms, and millions of them go into factories. The number of women at work in 1900 was 5,319,397. I do not have the figures for 1910 at hand.

Working like men, they ought to have the same economic and political rights as a man. That is all there is to it. Not because women are better—although I believe they are better—and they are better looking, of course. [Laughter and applause.] As a matter of justice, democracy, and economic fairness women citizens should have the same political and economic rights as men citizens.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. BERGER. With pleasure.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think that if women had an equal political right to vote with men they would have enjoyed the privileges which they did enjoy the other day when the Titanic sank?

Mr. BERGER. I do. And for this reason: After all, woman is of more importance to the race than is the man, and every real man realizes that by instinct. The safe-keeping of the race is left to the women. [Applause.] I hope I will never be on a boat like the Titanic—I mean in a situation of that kind. But I, for one, and I believe every Member of this House, would stay back at any time and give way to the women and children, whether women enjoyed suffrage or not.

Gentlemen, I say again, I am in favor of the amendment, and I hope it will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Division!

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 41.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. FLOOD of Virginia and Mr. MONDELL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 35.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask unanimous consent to return to section 5, line 22, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman is asking unanimous consent?

Mr. RAKER. I am going to when I finish reading this amendment.

Mr. JACKSON. I desire to offer an amendment to this section before returning to a former section.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. RAKER. I have moved to strike out the last word, and I wish to make a statement before I get to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman subsequently to make a request for unanimous consent, and to that request a demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. RAKER. I have not yet submitted my request for unanimous consent. I am heartily in favor of this legislature proposed by this bill. The people of Alaska should have a right to govern themselves as far as possible. I hope the bill will pass. Some amendments should be made, and in the five minutes which I have I desire to say that I shall, when the time comes, present the following as one of those amendments:

Provided, That all male and female citizens of the United States, residents of Alaska, having the qualifications specified in section 3 of said act of May 7, 1906, shall be qualified electors at all elections under the provisions of this act.

Now, I understand that the original vote on this proposition was 26 to 26 and then 41 to 41, so that it was a tie both times.

In response to the gentleman from Illinois, I want to say that since I have had the privilege of being a Member here, there has not been one roll call when I have been absent from my place in this House. I have at all times been present and doing my duty as a Member of this House. In addition to that, at the time when this matter came up to-day, I was in attendance before a committee which had under consideration important legislation bearing upon the interests of the State of California. I was here when the bill was being first considered this morning, as the record will show. While I was there this amendment was voted on. I believe, under the circumstances, after the vote which has been taken here, no man will permit himself to object to a proper request to return to this paragraph in order that the House may have an opportunity to vote upon this amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we return to paragraph 5 for the purpose of presenting the amendment just read, so that the House may have an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

Page 28, line 17, insert, after the word "application," the following: "Which residence and all causes for divorce shall be determined by the court upon evidence adduced in open court."

Mr. Chairman, I prepared this amendment before the question of equal suffrage was introduced into the debate the second time; and for that reason, when the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] sought to introduce it again, I was inclined to object. I want to say that I voted for it both times; but it seems to me that this section concerning divorce, as well as many other good amendments for which I have voted here to-day, have been sought to be written into this law for the purpose of preventing any scandal or any fraud in obtaining divorces in that new and distant Territory. It seems to me that the principal source of fraud in the granting of divorces rests in court procedure rather than in the causes for divorce, or even in the requirements as to residence.

I presume all lawyers here are acquainted with the practice of proving residence by affidavit, especially in cases where service is sought by publication. I think it is well, therefore, for us to provide that all questions of residence shall be established in open court, by testimony taken before the court; and I think it is also well, in order to guard againt any collusion between the parties desiring divorce, that the cause for divorce shall also be established before the court, upon testimony regularly adduced in court. That is the law in a number of States, and it has a salutary effect in preventing collusive and fraudulent divorces.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to earnestly ask this committee to adopt the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Kansas. I hope the committee will not object to this very important amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Do I understand the gentleman is in favor of the amendment?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will say that we are willing to accept the amendment. It is now the law or the practice in Alaska at this time, and the committee thinks it is a good amendment.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to learn that, but if the committee will permit me I desire to say one or two things in direct connection with it. It appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are making a mistake in regarding these matters as of little importance. The Nation does not so regard them. There has been a demand, Nation wide in extent, that the evils that are apparent in divorce proceedings, the scandals that have attended divorce proceedings in the United States, shall be remedied. Demands have been made that the National Government itself should seek to legislate upon this question. Of course, that demand is met by the answer, which is sufficient, that the Nation ought not to seek to invade and can not invade the province of the State in that regard. But a responsibility is placed upon us, Mr. Chairman, whenever legislation upon great and important questions of this kind for a Territory come before us. We must consider the rights of the people of the Territory which are involved in that determination and action, and we should also remember that the action we take will be considered as an expression of the sentiment of the people of the United States with regard to that question. And so I would very much like, if it could be possible, that this great question of divorce could be carefully considered not only in regard to the people of the Territory of Alaska, but as an expression, somewhat at least, of the sentiment of the people of the United States in regard to that question. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the author of this amendment a question. Is it the intention of this amendment to cut out such evidence as depositions in court?

Mr. JACKSON. No; depositions, of course, would be evidence. The purpose of the amendment is to cut out the secret granting of divorces, the star-chamber proceedings, and, what is perhaps more important, granting the publication of service on affidavits, so that any person who is divorced must appear in court and prove his case on testimony adduced in court.

Mr. FOWLER. The amendment does not deal with the method of getting into court, as I understand it.

Mr. JACKSON. That is true; but the provision of the statute is that no divorce shall be granted except upon two years' residence, which would be jurisdictional. The amendment provides that that must be established in open court on the testimony, so that if anyone sought a publication service, which, of course, they will in most cases of divorce in Alaska, they would some time during the case have to prove residence by producing the testimony in court.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment to the amendment by providing that no divorce shall be granted by default.

Mr. MANN. If you could not grant it by default, you could not grant it at all if nobody appears.

Mr. JACKSON. The amendment provides that it shall not be granted on default alone, but only upon residence in open court.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURNBULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, in lines 25 and 26, and line 1, on page 30, strike out the words "and all taxes shall be equal and uniform, and no distinction shall be made in the assessment between different kinds of property, but," and insert in lieu thereof the words "all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects and shall be levied and collected under general laws and"——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, we have conferred with the gentleman from Virginia about the amendment, and I think it is an improvement to the bill, and we accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 28, line 15, after the word "have," insert the following: "Been a bona fide resident of and actually," so that as amended the bill would read:

No divorce shall be granted by the legislature, nor shall any divorce be granted by the courts of the Territory unless the applicant therefor shall have been a bona fide resident of and actually resided in the Territory for two years, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 28, line 15, by adding after the word "have" the words "been a bona fide resident of and actually."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman please explain the effect of that amendment? How does it change the meaning of the statement as it appears in the bill?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a man may be a resident of a State and only be there in the year three or four weeks at a time. That has been one of the defects in the laws and the cause of so much trouble in States where they grant a divorce to a man where it is provided only that he shall be a resident.

Mr. WILLIS. In that case he will not have resided in the Territory for two years. The bill provides that he must have resided there for two years. How could he do that and not be a bona fide resident? The gentleman has simply taken the method of circumlocution to accomplish the same thing already provided for in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Not at all. The language of the bill is:

Unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in the Territory for two years.

Mr. WILLIS. The bill says that he must have resided there for two years.

Mr. RAKER. That does not say that he shall have been an actual resident there during that time.

Mr. WILLIS. If a man resides in a place for two years is he not an actual resident for two years?

Mr. RAKER. Not necessarily.

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, vote!

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, it is all very well to say "Vote," but the courts have settled that question very distinctly in a number of cases. He may be a resident of the Territory, but where he is actually residing is another question. This makes it so that he must not only be a resident but he must be actually residing there in that Territory for two years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California is simply confusing the word "domicile" with the word "residence." That is all there is to it.

Mr. RAKER. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice that the bill does not say that he shall be a resident, but it says that the person shall reside there for two years.

Mr. RAKER. It does not say that, but it says "shall have resided."

Mr. MANN. Very well; "shall have resided." If that does not mean shall reside there, then I do not know what it does mean.

Mr. RAKER. Clearly, to me, it does not cover the question, and a man may go there and stay a couple of weeks and then go away for a month or two and come back, and though that will have been his residence, in contemplation of the law, under the use of the word, he will not have been an actual, bona fide resident actually residing there during all of two years' time. I want him to actually reside in the Territory as well as being a bona fide resident thereof. I am now residing here in Washington, but by no means a bona fide resident of the District of Columbia. I am here on business. The applicant for divorce should not be a resident of Alaska on business—that of getting a divorce—but should be a bona fide resident, actually residing in Alaska.

Mr. MANN. If a man resides at a place for two years, he is an actual resident, and he actually resides there. How the courts may construe it does not make any difference, and the gentleman's language will not change it at all. If he wants to make a man stay there all of the time for two years, he will have to use the word "continuously."

Mr. RAKER. I think this language means continuously, and that is the purpose of it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I can not accept that amendment. I do not think a man or a woman ought to be denied the right of divorce because sometime during the two years that he was a resident of the Territory he happened to be out of Alaska. I do not think the language the gentleman proposes changes the section at all, but rather than have a debate I accepted it. I did not, however, mean to accept the word "continuously," and if that is the construction put upon it I think it ought to be voted down.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, there is this distinction which the gentleman's amendment would cover: A man might go to a place and actually live there for two years for the purpose of getting a divorce, but he would not be a bona fide resident for the purpose of divorce. I think that the term "bona fide" should go into the law relating to all divorce proceedings and should be essential.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the statute said that a man should actually reside in a place for two years, can it mean anything else except that he shall be a bona fide resident and actually live there?

Mr. NYE. Not if he goes there and lives for the purpose of getting a divorce, as they have done in some of the Northern States. He is not then a resident in good faith.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then he is not an actual resident.

Mr. NYE. It is not a residence that is sufficient for a divorce.

Mr. BARTLETT. The statute says he must have actually resided there for two years.

Mr. NYE. Oh, well, I think the gentleman understands my proposition.

Mr. BARLETT. I understand it.

Mr. NYE. A man may live in a State 10 years for the purpose of getting a divorce and not be a bona fide resident.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were—ayes 7, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 28, in line 24, insert, after the word "be" and before the word "sold," the words "manufactured or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 28, line 24, by inserting, after the word "be," the words "manufactured or."

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the amendment at length, but the report of the bill does not cover this amendment in any way, and I would like to have an expression——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman from Georgia that the committee accepts that amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to move an amendment. On page 28, lines 24 and 25, strike out the following words:

Except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress shall provide.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 28, lines 24 and 25, by striking out the words "except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress shall provide."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will be voted down. The people of Alaska want Congress to pass and the Federal officers to administer these laws, and they do not want to turn it over to the Territorial legislature.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment was not designed to bring about the condition the distinguished chairman has suggested. The object of the amendment was to leave the Alaska act with a definite provision establishing prohibition in the Territory. The proposed act now reads: "Nor shall spirituous or intoxicating liquors be sold except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress shall provide." I am moving to strike out the words "except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress shall provide," so that it will leave the statute thus: "Nor shall spirituous or intoxicating liquors be manufactured or sold."

I recognize that although that were done it would be within the power of Congress hereafter to legislate if it saw fit, but the pending bill itself carries with it the implication that Congress will hereafter legislate upon the subject, and I merely desire to affect a straight prohibition law against the manufacture and sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors in the District of Alaska.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment would accomplish the result the gentleman has in view. The striking out of these words would not keep Congress from passing another law granting the right to sell and manufacture liquor up there. I think the bill as it stands is in the best form.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to change the word "shall," on page 28, line 25, to the word "may"?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Which line?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Line 25, the word "shall," where it first appears in line 25, and amend that by substituting therefor the word "may."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. "Except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress may provide"—oh, yes; I accept that.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I withdraw the original amendment—no; I do not withdraw the original amendment.

Mr. MANN. Let us have the amendment again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The Clerk, Mr. Chairman, evidently misapprehends. I insist on the original amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What is the original amendment?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I move to strike out the clause "except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress shall provide."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. You want to strike that out entirely?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Entirely.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, I would not want to accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report, without objection, the original amendment.

The original amendment was again reported.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is no necessity of my accepting an amendment if the gentleman is going to insist upon his original amendment. I thought he was going to withdraw this.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I understand the gentleman's statement in no way binds him, because I am insisting on my original amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The situation comes up on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] providing that the words "except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress shall provide" be stricken out. The committee is opposed to striking the words out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 28, line 25, by striking out the word "shall" where it first occurs in line 25 and substituting therefor the word "may."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 28, line 25, by striking out the word "shall," after the word "Congress," and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I take it the only effect of changing "shall" to "may" there will make "may" relate to the future. I do not know what other effect it would have. If the intention is to only make it relate to future regulations of Congress it ought not to go in there, because we have now provided for the regulations and have provided restrictions which ought to be enforced, and I am sure the gentleman does not wish to change those regulations and restrictions by this act. And that is the only effect I can see of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, my understanding of the amendment is that it really makes no change in the effect of the bill, not the slightest. The word "shall" and "may" would be considered to mean exactly the same thing. That is my understanding, Mr. Chairman, of what would be the effect of this amendment, and for that reason I agreed to accept it, but I would not like to throw any doubt on what the position of this law is, and, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I think this ought to be voted down.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] yield, in order that I may ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I yield.

Mr. HOBSON. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if I understand him to say that there are now regulations in effect that would apply under this statute to the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. MANN. I understand there are very strict regulations passed by Congress in regard to the sale of intoxicating liquors in Alaska.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. And the whole matter is under charge of Congress and the departments.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is precisely correct as to existing laws touching the sale of liquors in Alaska. The use of the word "may" here in its legal determination relates back just as much as the word "shall" would relate back. Neither the word "may" nor the word "shall" interferes with any proviso of the existing law. But the word "shall" in this connection may be obligatory and mandatory, while the word "may" would not be; so that if the word "may" is used it undoubtedly would relate back to the existing law, but would not declare in legal terms that it is the determined policy of Congress to continue present statutes or enact others permitting and regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in Alaska. The word "may" will leave it wholly within the power of Congress as to continuing and administering the existing law and as to the enactment of any future or other law relative to that subject, but could not be construed as mandatory in its nature.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. Rules, quorum, and majority.—That the council and house of representatives shall each choose its own officers, determine the rules of its own proceedings not inconsistent with this act, and keep a journal of its proceedings; that the ayes and noes of the members of either house on any question shall, at the request of one-fifth of the members present, be entered on the journal; that a majority of the number of members to which each house is entitled shall constitute a quorum of such house for the conduct of ordinary business, of which quorum a majority vote shall suffice, but the final passage of a law in each house shall require the vote of a majority of all the members to which such house is entitled; that a smaller number than a quorum may adjourn from day to day and compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner and under such penalties as each house may provide; that for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is a quorum present the presiding officer shall count the number of members present.

Mr. FOWLER and Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 31, lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, commencing with the word "but" in line 1, the following:

But the final passage of a law in each house shall require the vote of a majority of all the members to which such house is entitled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 1, strike out the word "but" at the end of the line, and all of lines 2 and 3, and the words "is entitled," on line 4.

Mr. MANN. The purpose of that amendment is not to change that requirement. That requirement is contained in section 13 in this language:

That a bill in order to become a law shall have three separate readings in each house, the final passage of which in each house shall be by a majority vote of all the members to which such house is entitled, taken by ayes and noes, and entered upon its journal.

That is where it requires that a bill shall pass by a majority vote in each house, which is precisely the same thing that was attempted to be covered the second time in this provision, although here it relates to a law instead of a bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman from Illinois is correct about that provision. It is unnecessary there, and the amendment might just as well be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 31, line 9, after the word "count," by inserting the words "and report"; and in the same line, after the word "the," insert the word "actual."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to require the presiding officer to count and report the actual number of members of the house who are present, so that the line would read, "officer shall count and report the actual number of members present."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Report to whom? To the President of the United States?

Mr. FOWLER. No. When the question of no quorum is raised by any member the presiding officer might look over the house and count a portion of the number, or he might count more than is present, and decide that a quorum is present, when really a quorum is not present. This amendment seeks to compel the speaker to give a fair and correct count of all members present when the question of a quorum is raised, and to compel him to report from the chair the exact number of members present after he makes his count.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been in the legislature of my own State, wherein I have seen the presiding officer, who had the power, scan the number of votes and count for a quorum, and declare a quorum present when there was not a half or a third of a quorum present. The object of this amendment is to get the actual number who were present counted and reported.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I accept the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. Legislator shall not hold other office.—That no member of the legislature shall hold or be appointed to any office which has been created, or the salary or emoluments of which have been increased, while he was a member, during the term for which he was elected and for one year after the expiration of such term; and no person holding a commission or appointment under the United States shall be a member of the legislature or shall hold any office under the government of said Territory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the word "Territory" may be properly spelled at the end of line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question regarding the spelling of that word. Is it not the duty of the engrossing and enrolling clerk properly to spell the word when the bill is engrossed? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It may be that the engrossing clerk will do that. I do not know. I know that the printer made a mistake in spelling this word. I suppose it could be corrected without attracting the attention of the House. It may be that some gentlemen in the House do not know that the word is misspelled. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will make the proper correction. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. The veto power.—That, except as herein provided, all bills passed by the legislature shall, in order to be valid, be signed by the governor. That every bill which shall have passed the legislature shall be certified by the presiding officers and clerks of both houses, and shall thereupon be presented to the governor. If he approves it, he shall sign it and it shall become a law. If the governor does not approve such bill, he may return it, with his objections, to the legislature. He may veto any specific item or items in any bill which appropriates money for specific purposes, but shall veto other bills, if at all, only as a whole. That upon the receipt of a veto message from the governor each house of the legislature shall enter the same at large upon its journal and proceed to reconsider such bill or part of a bill and again vote upon it by ayes and noes, which shall be entered upon its journal. If, after such reconsideration, such bill or part of a bill shall be approved by a two-thirds vote of all the members to which each house is entitled, it shall thereby become a law. That if the governor neither signs nor vetoes a bill within three days after it is delivered to him it shall become a law without his signature, unless the legislature adjourns sine die prior to the expiration of such three days. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within three days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature, by their adjournment, prevents its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 33, line 8, by inserting, after the word "days," at the end of the line, in parentheses, the words "Sundays excepted."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 33, line 8, by inserting at the end of the line, after the word "days," in parentheses, the words "Sundays excepted."

Mr. MANN. That makes it conform to the provision in the latter part of the section, and it is necessary for that purpose.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 33, line 8, after the word "within," strike out the word "three" and insert the word "ten."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 33, line 8, after the word "within," by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "ten."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that three days for a governor to examine bills is a very short time for him to make up his mind as to whether the provisions thereof are salutary or not. It looks to me as though the number of days is too short. There ought to be at least 10 days, and my recollection is, Mr. Chairman, that that is the number of days that are usually given in the various States, especially those that I am acquainted with.

In my own State of Illinois, as I recall it, 10 days are accorded to the governor for the purpose of inspecting and examining bills that have been submitted to him after they pass both branches of the legislature. To confine it to three days would, in my opinion, be unwise, because it would not give the governor an opportunity to examine a great number of bills that might be rushed to him in the closing days of the session, as is very common, among which bad bills might become laws and good bills might be vetoed because of a lack of time to make the proper examination. I hope that the amendment may pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much inclined to agree with my colleague, but I wish the committee had provided here for the governor having a right to veto a bill after the adjournment of the session of the legislature. It seems to me that is quite important where the session of the legislature is limited to 60 days. As we all know, a large proportion of the bills in any legislative body are passed toward the wind-up, and necessarily so. There is no other way for bills in conference to become laws, as a rule, and, in my judgment, the executive ought to have the right to sign or veto an appropriation bill or other bill after the legislature adjourns. If the legislature want to obviate that, they can pass the bills earlier in the session. I think the provision which I suggest is the law in most States, is it not?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, no; it is not the law in any State with which I am familiar.

Mr. MANN. It is the law in a great many States, and it works admirably. We know how it is here in this Congress. Nearly half the printed volumes of published laws of the United States passed at the short session of Congress bear date of March 3, and the President is called upon to sign a large number of bills in the last moments of Congress. The President has his Cabinet officers here, with a corps of men watching every bill that is likely to be passed to report upon it to him; but the governor of the Territory can not have that assistance, and if he does not sign a bill before the legislature adjourns it does not become a law, and there is no way of making it become a law. It seems to me it is desirable to give the governor the authority to sign a bill after the adjournment of the 60-day session of the legislature.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think the provision suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], as supplemented by the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], is certainly not wise. Ten days is too long a time to give the governor to hold a bill. All of us who are familiar with the workings of State legislatures know that some of the most important measures are passed during the last 10 days of a session. In fact, where the legislative session is limited to 60 days the most important measures generally come up during the last 10 days. This amendment would put it in the power of the governor to hold such bills for 10 days, or until the legislature adjourned, and deprive the legislature of the power of passing bills over the governor's veto; and if the further suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is carried out—that the governor be permitted to wait until the legislature adjourns and then veto the bills—it seems to me you had just as well not give Alaska a legislature. Ever since we have owned that Territory we have governed it by carpetbaggers. They pick up men here and send them there who have not the interest in the Territory that a resident has and make him the governor. That is true of the governor as well as other officials. Now we are passing a bill that allows these people to elect a legislature of residents of Alaska, but the governor may still be a nonresident. He still may be appointed by the President from Washington City or elsewhere, and may not have at heart the real interest or desire the development of this Territory.

We purchased Alaska 45 years ago, and in the contract of purchase we solemnly agreed to admit the civilized people of that Territory to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States. During all of these years that compact has been ignored; for 45 years the civilized people of Alaska and 35,000 other American citizens who have joined them have been governed, when governed at all, by carpetbaggers, and now that a semblance of self-government is being provided for, these amendments are offered, which, if adopted, will leave the legislature powerless in the hands of a governor appointed from Washington. They ought not to be put in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman spoke of my proposing to give the governor the right to veto a bill after the legislature adjourned. Of course, in a way, the gentleman is correct, but what I want to give the governor is the right to sign a bill after the legislature adjourns. He has the right of pocket veto now, without either signing or vetoing.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is my objection to the 10 days. If he has to sign a bill or veto it within three days, the handicap to the legislature is not as great.

Mr. MANN. I know, but whatever time is fixed he can exercise his pocket veto during that time. If he does not want to sign a bill that is passed in the last three days before the end of the legislative session, he does not have to do anything about it. The bill does not become a law. He is not required to veto it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That may be a misfortune of the legislature of Alaska, but we have limited it to three days, and he can only impose a pocket veto on the legislation of the last three days. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois would give the governor 10 days in which to do that. The subjects of legislation in Alaska are not so very numerous, but all of us know, because every man probably has had to do with short sessions of State legislatures, that they do crowd the most important business of the session into the last few weeks.

Mr. FOWLER. That being the fact, can the governor pass intelligently on those bills to give his approval or disapproval of them?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The statement of the gentleman from Virginia, to the effect that the most important legislation is crowded into the last two or three days, is the best argument for giving the governor the right to sign or veto a bill after the adjournment. He ought to have time to consider the bills. He is not a member of the legislature. How are you going to get him to consider, before adjournment, 50 bills handed to him at the last minute?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The governor is a part of the legislative department of the State. If he has attended to the duties of his office he knows the important measures that are pending before the legislature. Every governor knows the important measures that are to come to him. If he is attending to his duties he will follow the discussion of these measures, first in one house and then in the other, and will have ample time to digest the provisions of the bills and know whether he wishes to sign or veto them. Besides, there will not be the rush in legislation in Alaska that there is in the State legislatures. There is going to be a good deal of legislation of a local character, but not so much as we have in State legislatures.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not true that the governor is confined to the executive branch of the government, and can not, and does not, follow the discussion of the bills, and could not be expected to follow them like members do?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I did not say that he was expected to know them as members do, but a governor who is at all mindful of his duty keeps up with the discussions of important matters in the two bodies, and knows the important measures that are pending before the two bodies, and when they come to him knows pretty well what they contain.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But is it not better to give him a chance to consider them and prevent hasty legislation?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We do give him a chance; we give him three days to consider bills after they come to him.

Mr. AINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will.

Mr. AINEY. In view of the last statement that the governor has three days, I would like to ask the gentleman's construction of the bill. Suppose a measure passes the house the last day that the legislature is in session?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, I suppose the governor would have to do as the President of the United States does, be at the Capitol and sign the bills as they are passed.

Mr. AINEY. Suppose it required the governor to take some time for examination, what becomes of the bill?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The governor has a right to veto it. If he is not willing to sign a bill, he has a right to veto it. I think it would be much wiser that the governor should veto important measures at times than that a governor not elected by the people should be intrusted with the power of signing and vetoing acts after the legislature has adjourned, and especially of vetoing them when the legislature would have no chance of passing them over his veto.

I do not think this amendment would be objectionable where the governor was elected by the people and was answerable to the people, but I would never vest such power in a governor responsible only to an appointing power thousands of miles away from the Territory whose chief executive he is.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that under the statutes of the United States, as they now exist, this is the law applicable to all of the organized Territories. As I remember, the statutes of 1878, section 1842, is substantially in these same words. It is also the law in Idaho, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota, Montana; exactly this same provision prevails in these States. If the gentleman from Illinois has the statute I wish he would read it.

Mr. MANN. As to the time, section 1842 of the Revised Statutes, among other things, provides as follows:

> If any bill is not returned by the governor within three days, Sundays excluded, except in Washington and Wyoming, where the term is five days, Sundays excluded, after it has been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislative assembly, by adjournment sine die prevents its return, in which case it shall not be the law.

That does not apply to Utah or Arizona.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On page 32, line 8, strike out the word "three" after the word "within" and insert the word "five."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if that amendment is agreed to I propose to offer amendments in two other instances, to make the section correspond to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 35 and noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FINLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved signed bills of the following titles:

On April 15, 1912:

H. R. 18661. An act to provide for an extension of time of payment of all unpaid payments due from homesteaders on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, as provided for under an act of Congress approved June 21, 1906; and

H. R. 20190. An act to extend the time for the construction of a dam across Rock River, Ill.

On April 16, 1912:

H. R. 23246. An act appropriating $300,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against the impending flood the levees on the Mississippi River and rivers tributary thereto.

On April 18, 1912:

H. R. 9420. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Jackson, Miss., carriage and cannon or field-pieces; and

H. R. 20486. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Willamette River at or near Newberg, Oreg.

On April 22, 1912:

H. R. 19638. An act to authorize the San Antonio, Rockport & Mexican Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Morris and Cummings Channel;

H. R. 20117. An act to authorize the Nebraska-Iowa Interstate Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Bellevue, Nebr.; and

H. R. 21821. An act to authorize the city of South Sioux City, in the State of Nebraska, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River between the States of Nebraska and Iowa.

On April 24, 1912:

H. R. 16306. An act to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war.

LEGISLATURE FOR ALASKA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, page 33, strike out the word "their" and insert the word "its"; strike out "its," after the word "prevents," and insert in lieu thereof the word "the"; and after the word "return" insert the words "of the bill."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident that the English of this line is not perfect, and the object of the amendment is to put it in proper form.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. Payment of legislative expenses.—That upon an estimate to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, there shall be annually appropriated by Congress a sum sufficient to pay the salaries of members and authorized employees of the legislature of Alaska, the printing of the laws, and other incidental expenses thereof; the said sums shall be disbursed by the governor of Alaska, under sole instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury, and he shall account quarterly to the Secretary for the manner in which the said funds shall have been expended; and no expenditure, to be paid out of money appropriated by Congress, shall be made by the governor or by the legislature for objects not specially authorized by the acts of Congress making the appropriations, nor beyond the sums thus appropriated for such objects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, page 33, lines 18 and 19, the words "upon an estimate to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 33, lines 18 and 19, by striking out the words "upon an estimate to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary will make an estimate in any event. The general law requires it. I do not think that Congress ought to tie its hands so that the House can not amend an appropriation bill, as this would provide. It is the same thing to which I called attention some time ago.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Is not this different from that to which the gentleman called attention?

Mr. MANN. We adopted an amendment awhile ago about this.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Will the Secretary make the estimate anyway?

Mr. MANN. The Secretary under the general law is required to make an estimate of everything, but this would restrict the power of Congress to make the appropriation to the estimate made by the Secretary.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. And the gentleman desires to strike out down to and including the words "United States"?

Mr. MANN. Yes; so as to make it read "That there shall be annually appropriated by Congress," and so forth.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in this section it is provided—

There shall be annually appropriated by Congress a sum sufficient to pay the salaries of members and authorized employees of the Legislature of Alaska, etc., and no expenditure to be paid out of money appropriated by Congress shall be made by the governor or by the legislature for objects not specially authorized by the act of Congress making the appropriations.

That is, no money can be expended unless it is specially authorized by the act of Congress making the appropriations. It seems to me that if there is authorization by the act of Congress that is sufficient, and that that authorization might be general and not special.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman might find himself in a very bad box. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 4, page 34, the word "specially."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 4, strike out the word "specially."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. Laws transmitted to President and printed.—That the governor of Alaska shall, within 90 days after the close of each session of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, transmit a correct copy of all the laws and joint resolutions passed by the said legislature, certified to by the chief clerk of each house and by the secretary of the Territory, with the seal of the Territory attached; one copy to the President of the United States and one each to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Secretary of State of the United States; and the legislature shall make provision for printing the session laws and joint resolutions within 90 days after the close of each session and for their distribution to public officials and sale to the people of the Territory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This section contains a provision requiring the transmission of a copy of the laws certified to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. That conforms with the general law upon the subject of the legislatures of Territories. This bill also contains, in section 17, a requirement that the President shall submit all of the laws of the Territory to Congress. There can be no earthly reason for requiring the secretary of the Territory to send a copy of the laws to both Houses of Congress and also requiring the President to transmit a copy of the same laws to Congress. It only cumbers up everybody's record. I suggest to the gentleman that the provision ought not to be in both places.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman might offer an amendment to strike out that provision in section 16.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend, in section 16, by striking out that language in lines 14, 15, and 16.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will accept such an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, lines 14, 15, and 16, strike out the words: "And one each to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee to the words "chief clerk of each house," in the twelfth line, requiring the certification of the chief clerk of each house, and the gentleman from Illinois called attention to that a while ago and thought it ought to be amended.

Mr. MANN. It is certified to by the clerk of the Territory.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think that is sufficient, and I move to strike out the words, in line 12, on page 34, "the chief clerk of each house and."

Mr. MANN. "The chief clerk of each house and by."

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The words "the chief clerk of each house and by."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 12, strike out the words "the chief clerk of each house and by."

Mr. WICKERSHAM. So the certification will only need to be made by the secretary of the Territory.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, in line 16, after the word "and," the word "one," so as to provide for one copy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 16, page 34, after the word "and," insert the word "one."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. By this section Congress has the power to nullify any act passed by this Territorial legislature?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Congress may, as I understand, at any time in the future annul any of these acts. Did the Committee on Territories consider the wisdom of inserting a limitation or a date after which these laws may not be annulled? It may not be fair to the Territory to annul a law 5, 6, 7, 8, or 10 years after it has been passed, as rights may have been acquired in the meantime.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The committee did not consider that. The committee incorporated in this bill the usual provisions in Territorial organic acts. I do not agree with the gentleman about the wisdom of putting a limitation on it. If five or six years after the law is enacted Congress reaches the conclusion that it is an unwise law, I do not see why Congress should not annul it. Under similar circumstances Congress would repeal one of its own laws.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with the gentleman as far as the rights or privileges of Congress are concerned, but it may not be as far as the rights of the people of the Territory are concerned, and it seems to me it might not be just to the people of the Territory to annul a law years after rights may have been acquired under the Territorial laws.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It simply means the repeal of the law. If Congress has allowed a law to go along and it has been in effect five or six years and then Congress decides to annul it, it would do so just as it would repeal a law with reference to the affairs of this country.

Mr. BUTLER. What about the rights that may have been acquired in the meantime under the Territorial law?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. You can not pass a law that will impair the rights of the kind of which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. BUTLER. That may or may not be so. Now, would not this be against the development of the Territory where men have acquired rights and privileges under the Territorial act?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I take it, Mr. Chairman, if that is the case, Congress in the disapproval of the law, which will amount to its repeal, would take into consideration any rights that have been acquired while it permitted that law to be upon the statute books of Alaska.

Mr. BUTLER. I presume the committee and the gentleman from Alaska have considered it with a great degree of care and secured to the people of the Territory full opportunity to make their development.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, I would suggest that this does not add to or detract in the slightest degree from the power of Congress. We can nullify any law passed by the local legislature of Alaska, whether we have such a provision in this bill or not. That is not all. We are not bound by the provisions of the Constitution against impairing obligations and contracts. We have that right and having the right we exercise very diligently the right not to do it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLINE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 38) to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

THIRD PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an editorial on some chapters of political history in this country to-day, which is an editorial of unusual and historic interest.

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman advertise a part of it and let us know what paper it appeared in.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It appeared in the Courier Journal of April 23, and is called: The First Assault and Repulse of Third Termism—A chapter of half-forgotten history.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a certain editorial from the Louisville Courier Journal of April 23. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the article above referred to:

"THE FIRST ASSAULT AND REPULSE OF THIRD TERMISM—A CHAPTER OF HALF-FORGOTTEN HISTORY.

"I.

"Thrice since the close of the War of Sections—which strained the timbers of the ship of state and for a time put the Constitution out of line—has our representative system of checks and balances perilously approached the rocks of revolution—first, in 1867, when it was proposed to Mexicanize the Government by impeaching and removing Andrew Johnson, a President out of favor with the radical majority in Congress; second, in 1876, when, having centralized in its own hands what it believed sufficient power at Washington, a party beaten in the preceding national election contrived to defeat the will of the people and to seat in office a President who had just been rejected at the polls; and thirdly, in 1880, when a puissant and imposing body of public men, led by Roscoe Conkling, proposed to return Gen. Grant for a third term to the White House, presaging life tenure under the rule of the Man on Horseback.

"Seven self-sacrificing Senators saved us from the first of these dangers; the patriotic submission of the Democrats to the Electoral Tribunal from the second; and a majority of the national Republican convention, which turned down Grant and nominated Garfield, from the last.

"The country is now menaced with a fourth assault upon its integrity and intelligence by the scheme to nominate and elect Theodore Roosevelt to the Chief Magistracy upon a platform of revolution yet more drastic than any ever framed outside of anarchism, the pretext being that none other can be trusted safely and surely to lead the people away from a thralldom of their own creation, and to rescue liberty from a bondage which, whilst he was President, he did much to strengthen, in order that he may purify and return their own to a body of freemen from whom it has never for a moment departed.

"Third termism implies not merely life tenure. It means the centralization of power and its consolidation in the fewest hands. Aiming at autocracy, absolutism, and self-perpetuation, it sets itself against the principles and underpinning of all our institutions. If there were no tradition to oppose and resist its pretensions, however plausible, its very nature, quality, and argument should be sufficient to expose and defeat it. All the framers of our Federal fabric strove to limit its power. They sought to accomplish this by a just distribution of power. The simple distribution of power was to work its limitation. The Roosevelt teaching and purpose is the rescinding of this, and in that character it is a subversion not less treasonable in spirit and unpatriotic at heart because it puts on the habiliments of reform to masquerade as a progressive.

"The Courier-Journal, which has lived through and seen the country survive the first three of these historic episodes, meets the fourth with composure, confident that, under the all-seeing and benign dispensation of Providence, we shall come through with the drums of liberty beating and the colors of the law flying, the ark and the covenant of the Constitution intact. In nowise did we quail before the power and glory of Grant. We are undismayed by the genius and audacity of Roosevelt. We still believe in the virtue and intelligence of the people. We are sure that now, as before, the result will vindicate the truth, and, in preserving the Republic, 'justify the ways of God to men.'

"II.

"The Courier-Journal of May 11, 1874, printed the following letter from the National Capital. There had been some buzzing about Grant as a would-be Cæsar during the campaigns of 1868 and 1872. But the thought did not take serious hold and had quieted down after his second election. It had never much impressed the writer of this letter. How he came to write it and from whom he got the information and inspiration, since it made a prodigious stir at the time, may be of present interest as relevant to the immediate political situation. The letter was modestly printed without headlines or any attempt at display. We lift it bodily from an inside page, as follows:

"THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK.

"WASHINGTON, May 9, 1874.

"It is generally conceded here that the inflation balloon has collapsed and with it two or three presidential aspirants. The veto did certainly cook the goose of the Senator from Indiana, and from all appearances was so designed by the ingenious gentleman who put his name to it. Say what you will of Grant, that he is an offense to the crusaders and the grammarians, that he is a whirligig employed by the gods to bring in their revenges, it can not be denied that there has been method in his operations, both political and military.

"I have a memory that the Courier-Journal used to observe, in its unreflecting, facetious way, that there was danger that he might never be got out of the White House except upon a stretcher. Well, this silly conceit, in a rather milder form, begins to obtain something like credence here It is now believed in Washington, soberly and by the coolest-headed men, that Grant contemplates a third term, and that he does not reckon without his host.

"I confess that I think he has more than that in mind. When I look backward into the origin, course, and tenor of his administration, how he played with parties before he became President, and how he has played with the politicians since, when, rather bewildered if not awestruck, I reflect upon the make-up of his Cabinet; when I consider the cool way he disposed of Morton and the smooth way he would dispose of Washburne; when I see his equipage rolling through the streets in a defiant, regal style, as if unused to the simplicity of a republican court, and am told that his private habits are equally defiant; and, impressed by these things, when I remember that nobody is shocked or alarmed, I can work out in my mind no other result as the natural, the inevitable purpose of his mind than that sort of personal government to which Prince Louis Napoleon addressed himself after his elevation in 1848 to the Chief Magistracy of the French Republic.

"And why not? What is to prevent him, and who? Look at the state of parties. There are in the Republican Party but two considerable men remaining on the scene as presidential possibilities—Blaine and Washburne. The veto killed Morton as dead as a doornail. It set Logan back a thousand years. Conkling is not in Grant's way. He and Grant have made a league, offensive and defensive. If Washburne comes home and goes into the Cabinet, that will be the end of him. Blaine is a man of extraordinary energy and spring—by odds the brightest man in Congress—but with a divided party what show will he have?

"Cross we over to the Democratic Party. It is not only divided, but it has not one single leader of real genius and nerve. Thurman is a solemn respectability, cold and virtuous. Hendricks is but an amiable commonplace.

"The Grangers come in between the two parties. They are merely slate smashers. They embrace only a class, are sectional and visionary. The straight Liberals are scattered. The South is a cipher. It is helpless, demoralized, in a condition to sell out or be crushed out.

"Thus behold the opportunity and the man; a dismal prospect indeed, but a real and dangerous prospect.

"The late Arkansas outrage is grist to Grant. Instead of injuring his administration it adds to his individual strength and prestige. It contributes to the complexities of the situation. It arouses and augments popular discontent. Strangely enough, there is little disposition to hold him responsible for such occurrences as, under his sanction and through his agents, have disgraced the whole country in the various Southern States. They only render it the easier for him to solidify the North and overcome the South.

"Thus matters stand at the present moment. Grant is the central figure. The Democrats are just strong enough to lose. The Grangers are just weak enough to sit in the game. The Liberals are neither strong enough nor weak enough to count, except as idealists. Everything seems to favor Grant. No matter what is done, it leans Grantward. If the presidential election should come off this year, nothing could keep him from a third term, and elected for a third term, the Courier-Journal's stretcher will be the last resort of the impracticables. They will not be able to compass his overthrow by the old peaceful means. A third term means revolution, and Grantism and revolution are synonymous. They imply the same thing. They are convertible terms.

"Enough of this, however. I scribble down a few stray thoughts which come to me between the sherry and the champagne, none the less serious for the wine, believe me. It makes a southern man of liberal ideas and good intentions, schooled in the dangerous field of practical revolution, sick at heart to contemplate the indurated spirit of the North in Congress. Take any or all of the leaders and then turn to the rank and file of adventurers, Democratic and Republican, who are crowding the scene and playing for all in sight, and one is tempted to exclaim: 'There is but one honest man at Washington, and that man is old Ben Butler!'

"It may seem cynical, but it is at least half true, for the would-be leaders are for the most part humbugs or imbeciles, and it can not be said, whatever his deformities, that 'Old Ben' is either.

"H. W."

"III.

"The writer of this letter received the suggestions on which it was based from James G. Blaine, who was then Speaker of the National House of Representatives. Before committing them to paper they were confirmed by Oliver P. Morton, then a Senator in Congress from Indiana. Although differing in politics from the writer, their relations in the intercourse of private life were altogether amicable, and remained such to the end of the lives of the two Republican statesman.

"The publication of the letter gave the signal for a great outpouring of ridicule and abuse. As an active member of the Liberal group of 1872, and foremost among southern men in accepting the issues settled by the war of sections and urging their acceptance on the South, he had many intimates among the northern leaders and editors, with whom his word had come to pass as worth something. These embraced many of the regular Republicans. Those who best knew him knew that he was not writing loosely out of hand but by the card and under a sense of responsibility.

"The Grant crowd, led by Conkling, turned loose with a kind of fury. They were not prepared to spring. Their plans had not yet ripened. The precise nature of the Courier-Journal's publication, anticipating their conspiracy, hit home, and they suspected where it had come from and who were back of it. The anti-Grant editors, led by Whitelaw Reid and Murat Halstead, having returned to the fold and owing party allegiance, treated the writer with a kind of amiable persiflage. The phrase, 'between the sherry and the champagne,' was seized upon as an apt cue for the expression of political fidelity along with the exploitation of the real matter in hand. Nast, who was devoted to Grant, let himself go with cartoons as ugly as the Harpers, who were personal friends, would allow him.

"Never did a piece of newspaper writing less intentionally sensational prove more sensational. 'Between the sherry and the champagne' lasted half as long and served very much the same purpose to deprecate and discredit as 'through a slaughter-house to an open grave,' the one instance of mistaken forecast which for 20 years has done duty as the nonsequitur of those who would disdainfully describe and dispiteously use him. Thus may a single slip of tongue or pen outweigh a hundred predictions that never went astray. Yet, after all, 20 years is a long time for even a slip of tongue or pen to be remembered, and the writer has reason to thank his critics for a world of advertising and at the same time a substantial tribute to his parts of speech.

"The fire grew too hot even for Roscoe Conkling. Ridicule and abuse of the Courier-Journal gradually changed to serious consideration of the import of its warning. Sectional hatred, the passions of war, the lust for power and plunder had not yet deadened the northern sense of precedents and tendencies, had not yet hardened the North to the claims of liberty and law.

"Congress by a well-nigh unanimous vote passed a resolution declaring against a third term. The third termers had laid the nucleus of an organization in New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois. But, in the teeth of an overwhelming demonstration of hostile sentiment, they wisely concluded that it was unsafe to proceed with this. Hence they failed to show themselves in any State and did not turn up in the national Republican convention in 1876. Not until Grant had gone out of the White House and made a spectacular journey around the world did the conspiracy take heart and move again.

"Gen. Grant's personal popularity was indisputable. Everywhere in Europe he had been well received. He came home glorified. The masses of the people seemed to rise to him. All that is being said now in favor of Roosevelt was then said with greater plausibility and better effect of Grant. For a while the prospect was radiant for the third termers.

"Conkling, who looked and loomed a kind of war god, made an inspiring leader and cut a superb figure. His speech nominating Grant in the national Republican convention of 1880 was an event. His colleagues, Cameron and Logan, were captains of political industry and past grand masters in the arts of machine-made public opinion. But the Republican Party—still true to Republican principles and institutions—would not have it. The third termers made a melodrama, where they are now making a circus, but they went down to defeat as the '306,' that being the highest vote they were able to cast in favor of the Man-on-Horseback and the exchange of constitutional government for a dictatorship and life tenure in the presidential office.

"As it was in 1880 shall it be in 1912. The moorings of liberty and law may be somewhat loosened in the commercialized understanding of a generation of money grubbers. Corrupt political methods may have disturbed the faith of many good people in free institutions. Fraud, greed, and force everywhere, the proclamation of war against bosses and bossism appeals to a universal sentiment. But deep down in the heart of men there are still the embers of liberty so long taken as a matter of course that they may need to be blown into life—vital still—the blood of the fathers yet flowing in the veins of the sons, the ideas of the founders in the minds of their descendants.

"Graft may not be exterminated by cant. A multitude of bosses can not be driven out by consolidating bossism into the keeping of a single boss. It is something worse than impudent charlatanry to propose it.

"They who do propose it are shallow fakers, self-seeking politicians in fact, and traitors at heart. *If their leader be of unsound mind, he should be taken to an asylum; if he be of sound mind, he should be whipped with scorpions from one end of the land to the other. That which was denied Grant will never be granted to Roosevelt. The proceeding is as transparent as it is ignoble. It is indeed as clumsy and as obvious as the old thimblerigging game of now-you-see-it and now-you-don't, which in the days of the Mississippi steamboat era, used to catch a few greenhorns upon the packets plying between Vicksburg and New Orleans. Yet, nevertheless, it took time and effort to drive the tin-horn gamblers off the river, as it will take time and effort to drive these tin-horn reformers off the Nation's reservation of liberty and law."

STEAMERS "SYRACUSE" AND "BOSTON."

Mr. OLIVER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 22580) to authorize the change of the names of the steamers Syracuse and Boston, and I submit a report (No. 658) thereon. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER LEVEES.

Mr. PERCY. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 102) relative to the rebuilding of certain levees on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and I request immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to offer an amendment, which the Senator from Mississippi accepts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will first ascertain whether there is objection to the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. SMOOT. I was not in the Chamber, or at least I was otherwise occupied, when the Secretary began to read the joint resolution. Is it a House or a Senate joint resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. It is a Senate joint resolution.

Mr. PERCY. It was introduced in the House and in the Senate, but this is a Senate joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. It proposes to appropriate one million and a half dollars to be taken out of an appropriation that is expected to be made in the river and harbor bill?

Mr. PERCY. The present river and harbor bill, which has passed the House, carries an appropriation of three and one-half million dollars, and this simply enables a million and a half of the amount which may be carried by that bill to be used at once.

Mr. SMOOT. It is virtually a loan, is it not?

Mr. PERCY. It is an anticipation of the appropriation to that extent, for immediate emergency work.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the regular appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River provided for by the existing act amounts to about $3,500,000. At the time the bill was prepared in the House and passed there the usual amount was included. Since that time the overflows of the Mississippi River have developed, and it is necessary that some part of that money shall be used before the bill can become a law in the regular course. The effect of passing this joint resolution is not to increase the appropriation at all, but to make the money available a few weeks earlier than otherwise would be the case.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to say that it is the intention to increase the appropriation made by the House?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Not by this joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. If this is virtually an advance, it will come out of the $3,500,000 appropriated by the House for this purpose.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The effect of the resolution will not be to increase the appropriation a single cent, but it allows the use of the money some weeks in advance of the passage of the river and harbor bill, it being necessary to close up certain gaps in levees in order to prevent what is known as the June rise from inundating that country again and interfering with navigation.

Mr. SMOOT. I supposed the condition was rather critical on the Mississippi River, and that some movement must be made that generally would not be considered by the Senate. If it were not for that, Mr. President, I think it is a very dangerous way of legislating.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is an unusual way, because the conditions are unusual.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I noticed and what I stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will inquire if this is a report from the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. PERCY. It is a report from the committee—a unanimous report.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. PERCY. From the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No objection is heard to the present consideration of the joint resolution, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The committee reports an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 21, strike out the words "the mouth of the Ohio River" and insert the words "Cape Girardeau," so that if amended it will read:

For improving the Mississippi River from Head of Passes to Cape Girardeau.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer the following amendment, which the Senator from Mississippi accepts. In line 9, after the word "rivers," I move to insert the words "or so materially weakened as to necessitate rebuilding."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to inquire as to the effect of this measure. We have no copy of the joint resolution available. I only speak from my recollection of its contents as it was read. Does this not in effect assure this item of appropriation when that bill comes into the Senate? Does not the recital here in effect bind the Senate to accede to that item in the appropriation bill when it comes in?

Mr. PERCY. That would probably be the natural consequence. The item for the Mississippi River has never been stricken out in the Senate in all the course of the river and harbor bills which have come before the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, it carries an assurance of two things. First, that there will be a river and harbor bill. Suppose that bill fails? Then this appropriation will have been made against the general funds in the Treasury, and the provision for a repayment or a charging against that item would be nugatory. I am not opposed to the appropriation of this money. I only want to see if I understand that it is in conformity with the method of appropriating money. I have sent for a copy of the joint resolution. I have not seen it.

Mr. CULLOM. Here is a copy.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now I have a copy of the joint resolution. If the Senate will indulge me for a moment, I will see how that language reads. The preamble, of course, will go out of the joint resolution.

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to rebuild, by contract or otherwise, in accordance with such plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission as may be approved by the Chief of Engineers, such portions of the levees on the Mississippi River and its tributaries as may have been or may hereafter be broken by the existing flood in said rivers, and the sum of $1,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for this purpose out of funds remaining in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That is the complete appropriation bill down to that point. It lacks nothing. Then comes the proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War shall keep an account of the actual cost—

Of course, he would do that anyhow—

of all work done under the provisions of this resolution, and upon completion of the work he shall report the total cost thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a sum equal to the cost so reported to be deducted from the unexpended balance of appropriations that may hereafter be made for improving the Mississippi River from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, and to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

The appropriation is complete, in my judgment. It is doubtless proper to make it, because these levees have been broken, the damage has been done, and it is perfectly proper to amend them, but we are going to run into a legislative snag in the event that the river and harbor bill does not come here or does not pass.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That would only minimize the evil effect of failing to pass the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why not leave it stand at that point, and then when we come to another river and harbor appropriation take that into consideration and diminish it to that extent?

Mr. PERCY. The trouble, I will say to the Senator, is that it was thought there would be less opposition to the measure in this shape, because it will be simply an anticipation of that appropriation. There is no possible difficulty about it, if the presumption is correct that at this session or a subsequent session Congress will certainly pass a river and harbor bill.

I realize the force of what the Senator from Idaho says, that the ordinary method would be simply to make this a clean-cut appropriation, without reference to future deductions, and in passing a river and harbor bill not to subtract that amount from it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If it appeals to the conscience of any Senator at all that this appropriation should be made, he would vote for it just as readily without regard to the proviso. If it is one of those conditions arising out of extraordinary circumstances which requires an appropriation to protect the people, I would vote for it, and I think any other Senator would vote for it, as an original proposition, but I do not want to mortgage the river and harbor bill. I do not want one item to be guaranteed before the bill comes into the Senate, and then perhaps no other item ever be incorporated in the bill. You are mortgaging a bill in which the whole country is interested—the river and harbor bill—for this one item. I shall cheerfully vote for it upon such information as we have generally in order to protect those levees, but I would not like to reach forward into the future with the possibility of creating some embarrassment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the objection indicated by the Senator from Idaho is one of form merely. If this joint resolution shall be passed by both Houses and approved by the President, it will be an affirmative appropriation of a million and a half dollars for the purpose of repairing the damage done by the lower Mississippi River. When we come to consider the river and harbor bill we can deduct this amount from the items contained in that bill, if it should pass, or we might perhaps direct the accounting officer of the Treasury to do it. It is a mere matter of form. The substance is to have a certain amount of money available at this time to repair as quickly as possible and as effectively as possible damages wrought in that great valley.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Arkansas will find himself confronted with this difficulty——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What would be the difficulty?

Mr. HEYBURN. It might be so interpreted at the Treasury Department that, inasmuch as this appropriation is to be paid out of another appropriation, if the appropriation out of which it is to be paid never materialize, then this enactment would be void. You have the ruling of another branch of the Government to contend with.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I should think there is sufficient language in the joint resolution to provide for a present appropriation of a million and a half dollars and giving direction as to how it shall be done. If the Senator from Idaho will trust us, who have had charge of the matter and who know the present character of the calamity that has befallen that valley, we will give him our assurance that nothing of that kind will happen. There is no trick about it; there is no disposition to complicate the fiscal affairs of the Government nor to otherwise take any advantage of the confidence of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a matter over which Senators could have no control. The suggestion that came into my mind as this was being read was this: There has gone out through the newspapers and through other sources of information and political scandal a statement that the river and harbor bill is to be killed. We are all interested in it; we have great rivers in our section of the country that ought to be provided for, and we would not like to see some one particular item protected by anticipatory legislation and then have the bill killed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There is no such danger, in my opinion; there is no possibility of it; at all events, that bill never could fail by a failure of the Senators on this side of the Chamber to give it their earnest support. The Senators who represent the Mississippi Valley are not asking and would not assume to ask for this appropriation if they harbored any such intention as that indicated by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. What objection is there to allowing this appropriation to stand as it reads down to the word "Provided," in line 13?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If there is anything in the joint resolution which the Senator from Idaho thinks objectionable, after leaving the appropriation and directing how it shall be expended, he is at liberty to strike it out.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if we are going to strike out the proviso, then I shall object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am sure the joint resolution has been carefully prepared, and I think it is properly safeguarded. A Senator who is as shrewd an interpreter of language as the Senator from Idaho is recognized to be might find objections to the form adopted, but not to the substance.

Mr. HEYBURN. My objection is to the substance; I do not object to the form of it. Certainly I am not posing as a critic of language, but I am objecting to the substance.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator's entire objection is based on an imaginary foundation. There is no such possibility.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would merely suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he refrain from such insinuations as that, because it will not forward his cause at all.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Well, I will modify that if the Senator will suggest a fact stated in the joint resolution that is not based upon a very firm foundation, as I understand the situation.

Mr. HEYBURN. A Senator is privileged to state his opinion in regard to legislation here without being charged with ignorance or folly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator from Idaho has entirely misunderstood me if he thought I charged him with either. I intended to create the impression that the rumors that had reached the Senator's ears were not sufficiently tangible to justify the belief that the river and harbor bill was going to fail at this session of Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, now, I wonder if any Senator would take the responsibility of saying that he would undertake to guarantee that a river and harbor bill would be passed at this session of Congress?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If it were necessary to do that, I would assume that responsibility, because I think there is no possible doubt about it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was only speaking from information which is given out.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Senator from Idaho will not see fit to insist upon his objection, and I will explain the reason for the form of the joint resolution. The idea that the earnest support which should be given by those interested in the Mississippi River appropriation to the river and harbor bill in the Senate will be in any way weakened by this appropriation, or anticipation of a part of that appropriation, is entirely without foundation, as will be realized when I say that that bill will carry probably from three to four million dollars for the improvement of the Mississippi River in addition to the million and a half provided for in this resolution. The particular form here adopted was simply adopted in order that the passage of the measure might be expedited and in order to carry assurance that no additional appropriation was being imposed by this emergency resolution, but merely a right to anticipate an appropriation which in every reasonable probability will be carried in the river and harbor bill.

The reason that made haste in the matter urgent is based, briefly stated, on these conditions: Thirteen breaks or crevasses have occurred in the line of the levee along the Mississippi River—one in Missouri, one in Illinois, one in Tennessee, and the others in Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas. Through these crevasses there are rushing rivers in proportion to the size of the respective crevasses; for instance, the Salem crevasse, in Louisiana, is discharging into the country back of the levees a river more than a mile wide, with an average depth of 18 feet. The floods have swept away houses, have destroyed millions of dollars worth of property and hundreds of lives, and have rendered homeless, it is estimated, more than 100,000 people, the great majority of whom are being cared for to-day by Government rations. The ordinary course of the Mississippi River is for this flood to be succeeded by a river within its banks, and thereafter what is known as the "June rise" comes, which reaches this section of the river about the 1st of July.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PERCY. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] that the House has passed the general river and harbor bill and it has been before our committee in the Senate for over three weeks. We have been holding hearings on it, but it will probably take some time before that general bill can be reported and passed. This is an emergency joint resolution, and whatever is appropriated in the joint resolution will come out of the general appropriation for the Mississippi River in the river and harbor bill. Therefore I trust the Senator from Idaho, in the goodness of his heart—and it is generally good—will withdraw his opposition, so that we may dispose of the joint resolution now.

Mr. WARREN and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to ask the proponents of the measure a question. I notice in the joint resolution the amount appropriated; and so forth; I also notice an amendment which the Senator from Mississippi intends to propose to the river and harbor bill, which provides that not less than $3,500,000 shall be expended for emergency work on the Mississippi River, and also that there shall be appropriated $12,000,000 for contract work——

Mr. PERCY. Yes; but not for emergency work.

Mr. WARREN. What is the relation between the two? Does one in any way take the place of the other?

Mr. PERCY. One in no way affects the other. That is an amendment to the river and harbor bill which is now before the Commerce Committee, and merely seeks to increase the amount carried by that bill for the Mississippi River from $3,500,000, as it passed the House, to $6,000,000. What the fate of the amendment may be before that committee I can not tell, but whether the bill as it passes the Senate carries four or five or six million dollars for the Mississippi River, the million and a half dollars which is sought to be appropriated by this joint resolution as an emergency will be deducted from that amount.

Mr. WARREN. I wanted to know what the relation was. Whatever is appropriated in the joint resolution will probably be deducted in the amount carried by the amendment. Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. PERCY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HEYBURN. I had yielded to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], but, if he has no objection, I will yield to any other Senator. I am going to say but a word or two more, and then I will yield the floor.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I should like to finish my statement.

The reason the joint resolution was put in this shape was simply because it was thought it would encounter less opposition in the House and in the Senate than if it were an independent appropriation of a million and a half dollars, and it was especially desirable that the measure should be put through without delay because of the value of every hour in this work. When the water recedes there will be probably two or three weeks between its recession and the time when the water will again begin to flow through the crevasses, unless during that time the crevasses can be leveed sufficiently to afford protection against the June rise, and there will be no crops of any kind grown during this year on more than 6,000,000 acres of land, and more than 100,000 people will be rendered absolutely destitute. That is the reason why there is especial urgency about the passage of the measure. It was put in this form because it was thought that it would create less opposition than in any other shape.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I now yield to the junior Senator from Mississippi, if he so desires. I had already yielded to the senior Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rise merely for the purpose of stating that, as it seems to me, there is some misapprehension in the Senate as to the status of the pending measure. The President of the Senate asked if there was objection to the present consideration of the measure. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] rose to offer an amendment. The President of the Senate then said, "The question now before the Senate is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?" The President then announced, "The Chair hears none," and the present consideration of the measure was entered upon.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi has correctly stated the proceeding.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Precisely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is now before the Senate by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unanimous consent has already been granted, and therefore there is not any room for any Senator's sole objection. Any Senator who so chooses has a right to offer an amendment to the joint resolution, but the joint resolution is now before the Senate by unanimous consent for present consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I thoroughly understand that, and I am speaking to the merits of the joint resolution, which is entirely in order, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Absolutely.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have but a few more words to say. I certainly did desire that the Senate should not enter upon an entirely new scheme or system of Government; that is to say, to authorize the borrowing of money upon the faith and credit of anticipated legislation. If you leave the proviso in, this is borrowing money from the Treasury. If you stop on line 13, with the word "appropriated," it is legislation for the appropriation of money out of the Treasury of the United States, and is entirely within the scope and purview of the constitutional provision and within the authority of Congress, but when you add the proviso, of course, that proviso relates back to the beginning of the subject matter stated in the joint resolution.

I merely suggested that if this work is necessary—and I do not doubt that it is—the appropriation be made without the proviso, and that we should take into consideration the question of the amount of the appropriation for that work when that came before the Senate; that is all. I can see no reason why Senators should object to it, except—and I do not impugn any man's motives—it is sought to secure at the same time a guaranty, or what will amount to a guaranty, of other appropriations. Now, we may or may not feel inclined to appropriate any more money.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOM. The guaranty, as the Senator calls it, is simply a provision that will take the amount now proposed to be appropriated out of the next appropriation bill for rivers and harbors.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and I undertake, Mr. President, to say that the Senator from Illinois, with his long service here, can recall no instance where an appropriation was made to be taken out of a future appropriation. I have known of no such legislation.

Mr. CULLOM. Whether it is or not, it certainly can do no harm to the Government if it gets the money back.

Mr. HEYBURN. It may do harm to other people who are entitled to consideration in legislation appropriating money for work in their sections of the country.

I am not going to enter upon any further discussion or objection to this matter, but I want the Senate to act with its eyes open. It is rather short notice upon which to enter upon a change of the whole system of making appropriations for the conduct of the affairs of the Government. Such a change should not be made without very considerable attention. As I have said, it is the first time in the history of the Government when such an attempt has been made, but once having established the precedent, only a power higher than this body can tell where it will end. There will be an attempt to anticipate appropriation after appropriation, and every anticipation of it by legislation is a mortgage upon that appropriation and a mortgage upon the action of this body when the question comes up. Of course, I assume—I am willing to believe the statement to the fullest extent—that this appropriation is necessary. Then, if it is necessary, let us vote for it and make the appropriation, but let us not mortgage the future legislation of this body.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, as I understand, and open to amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment, and two amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on page 2, line 18, I move to strike out the words "deducted from" and insert "charged to," so that it will read:

> And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a sum equal to the cost so reported to be charged to the unexpended balance of appropriations,

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 18, after the words "to be," it is proposed to strike out "deducted from" and insert "charged to."

Mr. PERCY. I should like to consent to the amendment, but the bill was carefully prepared in its present form in the office of the Chief of Engineers, and is now before the appropriate committee of the other House, having been at the same time introduced in that body, and, if I may say so, has been reported by the House committee in this shape with a favorable recommendation. I think the language employed is correct. From whatever appropriation may be carried by the river and harbor bill for the Mississippi River, the amount proposed under this joint resolution is to be deducted, and the amount so deducted is to be turned back into the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PERCY. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I was only looking at it from the standpoint of the books of the Treasury Department. They will have a credit of $3,500,000, if that amount shall be appropriated in the river and harbor bill, and whatever has been expended of the appropriation provided by the pending joint resolution is to be charged to that amount, and in order that it shall be properly charged it must go to some credit, so that will be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury of the United States. That would be the natural way of doing it. If the Senator, however, insists upon no change in the bill, I shall not be particular about it, but I think that is the proper wording.

Mr. PERCY. The only objection I have is the delay that will be involved.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there will be any delay, because, if the joint resolution passes the Senate to-day, it will go to the House, and the House will act upon it. If it was going to delay the matter, I would not insist; or, if the Senator insists now that is not a proper amendment, I will withdraw it; but I think that is the proper wording.

Mr. PERCY. I would prefer, if the Senator is willing, that the amendment be withdrawn.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator insists, I will withdraw the amendment, although I think it is proper and right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah withdraws his amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Mississippi regarding a matter to which my attention has just been called. Is it true that an amendment has been offered by the Senator from Mississippi increasing the appropriation carried in the river and harbor bill as passed by the House to $6,000,000?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct. The amendment was presented at the same time the pending joint resolution was introduced. It has not been passed upon by the Commerce Committee, however.

Mr. HEYBURN. The estimates on which the appropriation in the House bill is based—estimates provided to be made and furnished to Congress—were $3,500,000, were they not; or were they $3,000,000?

Mr. PERCY. Three million five hundred thousand dollars, as the bill passed the House; but that had nothing to do with the estimates.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course, the appropriation against which the $1,500,000 is to be charged is contained in the House bill as it has come to the Senate. It must originate in the House. If the appropriation in the House bill is based upon an estimate, the estimate is presumed to represent the necessity of the regular improvement of the river. If we take $1,500,000 out of that, then that will bring the appropriation down below the estimate; that is, the regular work must suffer for this extraordinary work. Is that the intention?

Mr. PERCY. That would be true if there is no increase in the bill in the Senate. The $1,500,000 appropriated in the joint resolution would be deducted from the $3,500,000, and everyone, whether a member of the Mississippi River Commission or otherwise connected with the Mississippi River, would recognize that in the treatment of the river the paramount and pressing necessity was the closing of the crevasses, even if the regular expenditured interests had to suffer thereby.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is perfectly plain to everyone that if the amount for the Mississippi River remains as it is now in the proposed House bill, $3,500,000, based upon the estimates required to be made and given to the House as the basis of legislation, then, if you pass this joint resolution and deduct $1,500,000 from that sum, it can only be recouped by increasing the general appropriation in excess of the estimates. That is true, is it not?

Mr. PERCY. The estimates for the Mississippi River by the engineers are on the basis of $80,000,000 to be expended in 20 years. The House has not, as was expected, appropriated $4,000,000 a year.

Mr. HEYBURN. The House has not contemplated this appropriation at all in making up their bill. They have made up their bill upon the estimates.

Mr. PERCY. Not upon the estimates, because they cut the amount very much below the estimates.

Mr. HEYBURN. What are the estimates?

Mr. PERCY. The estimate for the Mississippi River, on the basis of 20 years and a total of $80,000,000 for the improvement, was $4,000,000 a year. The House in the last bill passed appropriated $3,000,000. This year it has been increased to $3,500,000 as the bill passed the House.

Mr. HEYBURN. The joint resolution recites that the amount carried by the river and harbor bill as passed by the House is $3,500,000, and that was based upon the estimates. The House gave the full estimate on this item, did they not?

Mr. PERCY. The House did not make the appropriation up to the estimates of the engineers.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; but the estimate for one year's work upon this river is correctly stated in the preamble to this joint resolution, is it not, at $3,500,000?

Mr. PERCY. That is not the estimate. That is the amount that the river and harbor bill carried as it passed the House, which was not up to the estimates as given by the engineers.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not up to the estimates for a period covering several years.

Mr. PERCY. Not for any one year.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have the estimates, if I had time to put my hands upon them—they are at my desk here, I think—but does the Senator expect to press his amendment increasing the item to $6,000,000?

Mr. PERCY. With or without reference to the passage of this resolution, I expect to ask for an appropriation of $6,000,000 for the Mississippi River.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is, $6,000,000 in lieu of the $3,500,000 appropriated in the House bill?

Mr. PERCY. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Every one who is familiar with this situation must recognize that an unusual exigency has arisen because of the flood in the Mississippi River, which is almost unprecedented; it is the first serious flood for nine years. If an amount was fixed as necessary for the prosecution of the improvements in the Mississippi River before that flood, it will be absolutely necessary now to revise the amount and increase it. The exact extent of the amount is a matter for further consideration and study of the Senate. I trust the Senator from Idaho will not object to this provision, whether it be exceptional or not. There will necessarily be some delay before the river and harbor bill becomes a law, and it is desirable that plans be made now, so as to repair the levees before the so-called June rise. One dollar expended now might be as useful as two dollars expended at a later time.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I doubtless have as keen an appreciation of the situation as another, and I recognize that it is a serious situation. We are juggling with millions here this morning—not hundreds or thousands for the relief of some person who has suffered in the service of the Government, but we are juggling with millions, and the time is well spent, probably, in making the record justify our action. Sometimes, perhaps, we are forgetful of the fact that whatever we do, whatever conclusion we express that carries with it the responsibility, should be and must be justified by such consideration and explanation in the RECORD as will commend it to those whom we represent in this place.

I am not raising these questions in levity, or because I have nothing else to do. When this matter first came to the desk, I took it up. I have been familiar with the situation on the Mississippi River during all of my lifetime. I know about the rise of the waters of that stream, and the periods when the river rises, and all of that, and the danger. I fully realize the necessity of prompt action in this matter. But I am as much interested in the question as to the propriety of the action, and it is quite as important to be considered. I do not feel that I am called upon to make any apology to myself even for occupying the time of the Senate in seeing whether we can not do this in a regular way rather than in an irregular way. The regular way would be to make the appropriation speedily, and to make it available at once, to repair these breaks and the destruction that has resulted from them. We have made liberal appropriations here within the last 10 days for the relief of the sufferers by reason of that.

I trust that Senators will not think that this question is new to me, or at least newer to me than it is to them. The Mississippi River has not been acting differently in the last generation than it is recorded to have acted in the generations that have preceded us. The snows have always melted along about the same time of year and raised the water in the river, and it has come down and washed out people and cities and destroyed property. It is not necessary that one should live in any particular section of the country to know all about it. But if I make a statement that is not a verity I trust some Senator will point it out to me.

I arose in the interest of regularity of legislation. Since I have been in this body that question has given me perhaps as much trouble as any other. The disposition to cut across corners of lots because it is convenient to do it results in a great deal of bad legislation, some bad in substance and some bad in form, but all establishing precedents that arise to bother us in later days. I am quite anxious that we shall not enter upon this mistaken policy this morning.

The questions I asked the senior Senator from Mississippi relative to his amendment were pertinent. I have that amendment now before me. I did not have it on my desk at the time, but it seems to provide that not less than $3,500,000 of this sum shall be expended for the building of levees, and all levee work shall be considered extraordinary emergency work. I may be mistaken, but I think I am correct in classifying the work to be done under this joint resolution as within the exception of the bill. Yet you are proposing a bill to borrow money from that fund to do work not within the scope of the work provided for, but within the exception. That is the plain language of the bill. It says that all levee work shall be considered extraordinary emergency work, and, consequently, outside of this appropriation. What more profitable or more important subject could the Senate be considering this morning than this, unless we are going to toss these millions about as a bagatelle?

Mr. President, I have nothing to say as to the proposed amendments. My remarks are directed against the manner of the legislation, which proposes to borrow from a fund that at no time would this work be a participant in. Under this amendment no part of this money would ever come to this fund.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator is mistaken in his statement. One of the approved methods of improving the Mississippi River is to build levees.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know that.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Millions have been expended under the approval and with the direction of all those who take pains to inform themselves about that method of expending public money.

Mr. HEYBURN. That would ordinarily be supposed to be true, but the language of this amendment puts it upon a different basis.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That brings it back to the suggestion I made a moment ago, that those who drafted that amendment could not expect it to be subjected to the scrutiny of the Senator from Idaho. I have no doubt but what he can point out trifling inconsistencies in it, and I have no doubt that he could have improved the language of the amendments if he had drawn them in the beginning; but the persons who drew the amendments had in their mind the necessity of supplying at once a sum of money, when it was perfectly apparent a larger sum would be hereafter appropriated, and that the sum needed now could be deducted from that amount.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it is not appropriated for the class of work described in this amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have the language of it here. I will read it again.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am not talking about the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, because I am not entirely familiar with it, but I am entirely familiar with the scheme of improvements adopted by the Mississippi River Reclamation Commission, and carried out in the last 15 years for the improvement of that stream. One of the essential, I might say the dominant, method of improvement—the construction of levees on the banks—is to concentrate the waters in the channel and thereby assist in keeping the river open and fit for navigation. The construction of levees is not an exceptional method of expending the money appropriated, or an exceptional method of improvement.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not so stated. I have the amendment here.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator is reading from the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, which proposes new legislation. That is not the existing legislation; it is new legislation.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is just as much legislation as that contemplated by the rivers and harbors bill. One is just about as far along as the other.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator is again mistaken.

Mr. HEYBURN. They are both as yet in an inchoate state.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There is a statutory system dealing with the Mississippi River, in the form of a permanent statute, along lines that call for gradual development, and extending over a period of 20 years and involving an expenditure of about $4,000,000 a year.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Now, here is the language that the Senator from Mississippi has used.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I insist that the Senator from Idaho is reading from proposed legislation contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I were standing here proposing an appropriation for this necessary work, I might feel that I should give a different class of reasons. The proviso in the sixth line of the amendment of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] says:

Provided, That not less than $3,500,000 of said sum—

Said sum is $6,000,000—

shall be expended for the building of levees, and all levee work shall be considered extraordinary emergency work.

I think those who are interested directly—and all people are interested—in the work on the Mississippi River would prefer an appropriation that would insure the performance of this work rather than to tie it up with the possibilities of future legislation. I am content now, having made this statement in the RECORD, to allow the matter to take such course as the Senate sees fit.

Mr. PERCY. In order to make the amendment conform to the language that has been favorably reported on by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, I move, on line 19 of page 2, to strike out the words "unexpended balance of."

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a minute, before that is finally disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Utah objects for the present to agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to have the Senator from Mississippi explain why he desires to have those words stricken out.

Mr. PERCY. I stated that, in my opinion, it does not alter the sense of the measure at all. As it stands, it is an unexpended appropriation. As stricken out, it would be the appropriation for the Mississippi River. The only reason why I asked to have the words stricken out was that the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House has stricken it out in recommending the bill in the House, which has just been recommended this morning. It is simply for the purpose of uniformity and to avoid delay. That is my only object.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I think there will be an unexpended balance of the appropriation and consequently that is technically correct. I do not see why now you should say that because it is so reported it should be deducted from the appropriation. It is not an appropriation, but the bill says "appropriations."

Mr. PERCY. It is from the appropriation to be made for the river, and the effect is the same whether the deduction be made from the unexpended balance or made at the time the expenditure is consummated. If the deductions be made from the amount of the bill as it passes the Senate, before the expenditure has been consummated, the result is precisely the same; it is a million and a half dollars taken from that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The result would be the same perhaps if there was more than this amount in the appropriation, but if not, of course the whole amount could not be deducted from the unexpended balance. I do not see that the Senator gains anything by it.

Mr. PERCY. I gain nothing in the world except to avoid delay. The House has stricken out the words; the sense is not changed; the War Department assures me it is immaterial; and to avoid delay I ask the Senate to concur in the same amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not object.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERCY. Now, I have one other amendment to offer. The bill as reported was from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River. The committee substituted Cape Girardeau.

Mr. SMOOT. That has been agreed to.

Mr. PERCY. I find that the title of the appropriation as carried in the river and harbor bill is in the shape that it was originally, namely, to the mouth of the Ohio River. Therefore I ask that the joint resolution be restored to the form in which it originally was. The committee simply desired to make it conform to the title of the appropriation, but by referring to the bill I find that while the levee system is from Cape Girardeau to the Head of the Passes, the appropriation is made, as shown on page 34 of the bill, from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River; and therefore the joint resolution should read "to the mouth of the Ohio River."

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, then, can make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate having already agreed to the amendment, it will be necessary for the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. Is there objection to such reconsideration?

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator is not trying to reconsider the vote on the amendment I offered.

Mr. PERCY. No; I will say to the Senator from Illinois that it does not affect his amendment.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the committee amendment is disagreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it understood that the preamble will be stricken from the joint resolution?

Mr. PERCY. It will be satisfactory to have the preamble stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; let the preamble be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee recommends that the preamble be stricken out. Without objection, the preamble is stricken out.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to repair and rebuild the levees under the control of the Auburn and Linwood levee districts on the Arkansas River, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 21477), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

VOLUNTEER FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask that the bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war, being order of business No. 80, be taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOSPITALS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 614).

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a paper submitted to the Board of Trade of the District of Columbia by a committee on charities and corrections, which discusses the hospital situation in the city of Washington. I move that it be printed as a Senate document and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY AT SEA.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce what prospect there is for a report on Senate bill 3815, which I introduced early in the present session, providing that steamships sailing to and from American ports and carrying more than 100 persons should be equipped with proper wireless apparatus and served by two wireless operators.

I make the inquiry at this time because, while when I introduced that bill only one great marine accident had occurred which revealed the necessity for two operators, since that time another more tragic and more frightful accident has occurred, which has again demonstrated that the use of two operators is absolutely necessary.

I understand that in the case of the Titanic she had two operators, and in the case of the Carpathia, which came to her assistance, only one operator was on the vessel, and he was at the moment about to retire from his apparatus. A number of other vessels, I understand, were in the neighborhood equipped with some apparatus with only one operator.

It seems to me that this second accident, added to the wreck of the Prince Joachim early in the season, has demonstrated that there is an urgent need for early action upon this bill. I understand that possibly the committee has been delayed by the consideration of more elaborate bills for the control of wireless telegraphy at sea; but it seems that this measure is so simple, so urgent, and so obvious a need that the bill ought to receive an early consideration.

I should like to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether he can give us any assurance on the subject.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the bill to which the Senator from Nebraska refers, and also a general bill (S. 6412) relating to the matter of radiocommunication in general, were referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce during the early part of the session. That committee has been diligently at work, and they have reported a general bill intended to cover the whole method of radiocommunication. The bill has been reported, and it is on the calendar. It is a committee bill, Order of Business 577.

On the other bill, to which the Senator refers, which only covered the matter, as I understand it, of requiring two operators on each ship, the subcommittee have made no special report. I understand that the committee claim that they have to a large extent covered it in the general bill. Most of that subcommittee are now engaged in the investigation of the Titanic disaster. I presume by the time they get through with that investigation they will probably prepare a comprehensive bill especially relating to the matter to which the Senator refers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I realize that the work of the committee should cover a number of other subjects, but this is a very simple measure. The present law requires one operator, and the slightest amendment of the law can substitute "two" for "one." It seems to me there is neither room for debate nor for delay, but that it is an obvious need. Here within a single year two instances have occurred which have demonstrated the need of an additional operator; and I respectfully suggest to the chairman of the committee that however much delay may be necessary to consider more complicated regulations, this simple provision should receive early attention and early consideration. I do not like to urge the committee unduly.

Mr. NELSON. The chairman of the subcommittee is absent on the investigation over in the Senate Office Building. At the earliest opportunity I will call his attention to what the Senator says.

DESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I am informed that the Vice President will necessarily be absent from the Senate during Friday and Saturday of this week. I therefore request the unanimous consent of the Senate that the senior Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. GALLINGER, be chosen as the President pro tempore of the Senate for Friday, the 26th, and Saturday, the 27th, of the present month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 291), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Friday and Saturday, April 26 and 27, 1912.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 292), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Friday and Saturday, April 26 and 27, 1912.

THE HARVESTER TRUST.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, on March 16 the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] offered and the Senate agreed to the following resolution (S. Res. 250):

Whereas it is reported that there is pending before the Department of Justice a settlement between the United States and the International Harvester Co., by which the so-called Harvester Trust may be permitted to reorganize and to bring its organization and business within the Sherman antitrust law as construed by the Supreme Court: Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, instructed to lay before the Senate all correspondence and information he may have upon this subject, together with any and all correspondence, information, and reports of the Bureau of Corporations relating thereto, from January 1, 1904, to the present time.

The resolution related to the correspondence between the Department of Justice and the so-called Harvester Trust. This resolution, by the Senator from Tennessee, was introduced on the 15th and agreed to on the 16th of March. On the 25th of March the Attorney General made the following reply:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 19, 1912.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I am in receipt of a copy of a resolution adopted by the Senate March 16, 1912, reading as follows:

"Whereas it is reported that there is pending before the Department of Justice a settlement between the United States and the International Harvester Co., by which the so-called Harvester Trust may be permitted to reorganize and to bring its organization and business within the Sherman antitrust law as construed by the Supreme Court: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, instructed to lay before the Senate all correspondence and information he may have upon this subject, together with any and all correspondence, information, and reports of the Bureau of Corporations relating thereto, from January 1, 1904, to the present time."

In reply I am directed by the President to say that, in my opinion, it is not compatible with the public interests to lay before the Senate the correspondence and information relating to the International Harvester Co. in the possession of this department, nor the correspondence, information, and reports of the Bureau of Corporations relating thereto. These are matters pertaining entirely to business which is now pending and uncompleted in this department.

I have the honor to be,
Very respectfully, yours,
GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

It will be observed that on the 25th of March, when this communication was received by the Senate, Mr. Wickersham declared that it was not compatible with the public interests to furnish the information.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Are we to understand that the Attorney General undertook to say for himself that it was not compatible with the public interests to furnish the information, or was he saying it for the President?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will read his language and let the Senator from Idaho determine:

In reply I am directed by the President to say that, in my opinion—

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the President's opinion?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not know. I am reading the language.

Mr. HEYBURN. The way the Senator read it I got the idea that it was in Mr. Wickersham's opinion, and that is not in conformity with the practice.

Mr. BRISTOW. I was merely reading the language. What construction——

Mr. HEYBURN. What is the punctuation?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is punctuated as I read it:

In reply I am directed by the President to say that—

Comma—

in my opinion—

Comma—

it is not compatible with the public interests—

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; it should have been "in his opinion" unless there is a quotation.

Mr. BRISTOW. On the 25th of March we received a reply to the resolution adopted on the 16th of March, which asked the Attorney General to furnish the Senate information relative to correspondence which he may have had with officers of the International Harvester Co., and also correspondence which the Bureau of Corporations may have had with that company from January 1, 1904, up to the present time, and Mr. Wickersham declared that it was not compatible with the public interests to do so in either case.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. It goes to the question of the practice in the Senate, and my attention had not been directed to any violation of the established practice. It is not competent for any other person than the President of the United States to declare that it is not compatible with the business of the Government to furnish information. No lesser officer is authorized to make that reply. That is the reason I wanted the language read, but it appears there that Mr. Wickersham says that it was, in his judgment, incompatible.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is exactly what it says.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, he had no right to say that.

Mr. BRISTOW. On April 22—last Monday—the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, instructed to lay before the Senate all correspondence and information now in possession of the Department of Justice in relation to the proposed settlement between the United States and the International Harvester Co. by which the so-called Harvester Trust may be permitted to reorganize and bring its organization and business within the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law as construed by the Supreme Court, together with any and all correspondence, information, and reports of the Bureau of Corporations relating thereto from January 1, 1904, to the present time.

The resolution asked for practically the same information which had been requested in the resolution agreed to by the Senate upon the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. I should say that no response has been received from the Attorney General to the resolution offered by the Senator from North Carolina. There were two things asked for: First, the correspondence the present Attorney General may have had relating to a settlement and a reorganization of the Harvester Trust, presumably along the lines of the reorganization of the Tobacco Trust and the Standard Oil Co. The information under the first resolution was denied. The second resolution introduced and agreed to on Monday has not been answered. Yesterday afternoon the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] introduced the following resolution (S. Res. 290):

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with copies of the reports of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and Commissioner of Corporations and instructions of the President concerning the proposed prosecution of the International Harvester Co. of America made in the year 1907, and showing the facts concerning such proposed prosecution and the reasons for its abandonment.

You will observe that the difference between this resolution and the two former resolutions is that they called for the correspondence of the present Attorney General with the officers of the International Harvester Co., while this refers to correspondence only of his predecessor in the year 1907. The same afternoon, about two hours after this resolution was adopted, an answer was furnished. Whether the resolution was sent by special messenger or whether the Attorney General was telephoned that it had been introduced, apparently in harmony with his desire, I am not informed, but a report was presented which could not have been prepared unless the Attorney General knew that such a request for information would be made.

It is to be inferred that the President of the United States, desiring to use this confidential correspondence between his predecessor and a Cabinet officer and his private secretary, which was on file in the White House offices, thought it more fitting for it to be called for by the Senate in a resolution which had been framed in language that did not ask for information concerning his own administration. Was this exceeding haste because urgencies of the campaign required this material to be used to-day?

I simply wanted to call the attention of the Senate to the fact in regard to these resolutions and the spectacle which they present.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, before we pass from the subject, I wish to say that I notice that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD only the letter of the Attorney General appears. I therefore ask that the whole paper—Senate Document No. 604—may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that the readers of the RECORD may have the entire correspondence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the contents of Senate Document No. 604, Sixty-second Congress, second session, be printed at large in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The document referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 604, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., August 22, 1907.

Hon. CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney General, Hotel Aspinwall, Lenox, Mass.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: Mr. George W. Perkins, of the International Harvester Co., has just called upon me and submitted to me certain papers of which I inclose copies. According to these papers and to Mr. Perkins's statements it would appear that the Harvester Co. has repeatedly, on its own initiative, asked that its business be investigated by the Department of Commerce and Labor through the Commissioner of Corporations; that three years ago the Interstate Commerce Commission decided that it had accepted what amounted substantially to rebates; that Mr. Moody, the then Attorney General, was about to take action on this report, but the Harvester Co. at once promised to rectify the practices and see that nothing contrary to the ruling of the commission was again done. This was satisfactory to the Attorney General and the suit was dropped. The Harvester Co. says it is in position to prove that it has lived up to this agreement made in May, 1904. The Harvester Co. advances this as a proof that if any illegal action is pointed out it will itself rectify the matter on its being pointed out. It further appears that last December Senator Hansbrough got the Senate to pass a resolution directing the Department of Commerce and Labor to make an early investigation into the character and operation, and effect upon interstate commerce, of the International Harvester Co., and that in January last Messrs. Garfield and Smith met various representatives of the Harvester Co. in New York and a conclusion was reached that the department would begin the examination as speedily as possible, which conclusion was announced publicly in the press. On March 7 Commissioner Smith notified the Harvester Co. that the inquiry would be into the incorporation value of its property, securities, and the general management of its business. It appears by his letter of August 8 that Commissioner Smith has begun the investigation, but has not made such progress with it as he would like to on account of his being crowded with work. Mr. Perkins's request to me is that, before the company is exposed to the certain loss and damage that the mere institution of a suit would entail, this investigation by Mr. Smith as required by Senate resolution should be carried to completion. He explicitly states to me that there would be no intention to plead the examination by the Department of Commerce and Labor as conferring any immunity from proceedings by the Department of Justice.

Will you see Mr. Perkins and Commissioner Smith, go over the matter in full, and report to me thereon?

Please do not file the suit until I hear from you.

Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF CORPORATIONS,
Washington, September 21, 1907.

THE PRESIDENT,
Oyster Bay, N. Y.

SIR: In pursuance of my letter of August 30, 1907, I take the liberty of submitting for your consideration a memorandum in regard to the proposed action of the Department of Justice for the prosecution of the International Harvester Co. under the Sherman law. I feel that it is only proper that I should state my objections to such proposed action because of the bearing that it has on the work of this bureau and, still more important, on the entire policy of the administration as I understand that policy.

On August 24, 1907, by direction of the President, I met Mr. George W. Perkins, chairman of the finance committee of the International Harvester Co., and discussed the matter with him. On August 26 I saw the President and stated briefly my views, and, upon his instructions, I then, on the next day, saw the Attorney General at Lenox, Mass., and was informed by him that while he would be glad to confer with Mr. Perkins and myself at any time on this matter, he did not feel that he was competent to take up the matter thoroughly until the return of Mr. Purdy from Europe, who has special charge of this general class of cases. I therefore did not discuss the question with the Attorney General, and knowing that the President had instructed the Attorney General to take no further action in this matter until such final conference could be held, I have been awaiting the return of Mr. Purdy, who is expected back, I believe, about October 1. Inasmuch as I shall probably be away at that date and for some time thereafter, I am sending this memorandum now.

Briefly, the International Harvester Co., through Mr. Perkins, takes the position that it has, ever since the creation of the Bureau of Corporations, endeavored to put itself in line with the policy of publicity maintained by the administration; that, so far as it is aware, it has committed no violation of any statute; that it has continued to offer to the bureau from time to time complete access to all its books and papers and to give all the information desired as to its operations; that it has, indeed, frequently urged such investigation by the bureau; that it can obtain no direct information at all as to the nature of the charges against it, but that it has reason to believe that the case against it is purely a technical legal one under the Sherman law, involving merely an interesting legal question, as to whether the organization of the company per se constitutes a combination in restraint of trade, and that no moral sins or methods of unfair competition are included in said case; that Congress, in December, 1906, passed a resolution requesting the Department of Commerce and Labor to investigate the company; finally, that, such being the facts and such having been its consistent attitude of cooperation, it is unfair and inconsistent on the part of the Government now to subject the company to a prosecution for a technical violation of the Sherman law. The company simply desires that the Bureau of Corporations be allowed to conclude its investigation, and if any substantial violation of the law shall be discovered by such investigation the company is perfectly willing to stand prosecution.

To the extent of my present knowledge I am satisfied that the facts are as stated by the said company, with the single exception that I do not have definite knowledge as to the nature of the case now in the hands of the Department of Justice; but from the expressions of the Attorney General I am inclined to believe that it is, as Mr. Perkins stated, a purely technical legal question. As to the principle of fair dealing and good policy involved, I also concur emphatically with the attitude of the company.

It is certainly true that this company has been most open with the bureau. In 1904 Mr. Cyrus McCormick, the president of the company, called upon Mr. Garfield, offering him the cooperation of the company in obtaining information. In December, 1906, Mr. George Perkins wrote to Secretary Straus making a similar offer of cooperation. On the 28th of the same month Mr. Cyrus McCormick wrote to Mr. Garfield, making a similar offer and reminding him of his original offer of 1904. On January 18 and 19, 1907, Mr. Garfield and myself met at New York City Messrs. Gary, McCormick, Deering, and Perkins, all directors of the said company, and went over generally the subject matter of the company's organization and operation, receiving, so far as I know, absolutely frank and complete answers and further assurance of complete cooperation in carrying out the investigation. On April 1, 1907, Messrs. Cyrus and Harold McCormick called upon me at Washington, giving similar assurances and emphatically urging that this bureau undertake the investigation of their company.

Furthermore, the attitude of the Morgan interests generally, which control this company, has been one of active cooperation.

In the investigation of the steel industry the United States Steel Corporation has already spent thousands of dollars in compiling for the bureau the most complete and intimate information as to the business, and its officers have gone to immense trouble and loss of time to facilitate in every way our work.

While a certain amount of work has been done on the investigation of the Harvester Co. by this bureau, it has reached only a very preliminary stage, first, because of the lack of men to undertake the work, and, second, because of the intimations that have reached me from time to time since the beginning of this year to the effect that the Department of Justice would probably commence a suit against the company under the Sherman law, and I felt, for the reasons indicated below, that until this matter was settled one way or the other it was neither fair nor expedient that the investigation of this bureau should continue.

In my interview of August 24 with Mr. Perkins, he set forth a number of considerations which seemed to me of great weight. He stated that his company had endeavored to obey the law in every respect and had carefully put itself in line with the policy of the administration; that the interests he represented, including not only the International Harvester Co., but also the far-reaching Morgan interests generally, had originally favored the creation of the Bureau of Corporations and the policy of the President which that bureau represents, and that both in their attitude toward the bureau and in their conduct and management of their various concerns, including the United States Steel Corporation, they had adopted a similar policy of frankness and publicity; that so far as he was aware, they had not been guilty of any violation of the law, certainly none involving a moral consideration; that, as he phrased it, he was now being laughed at in New York by the Standard Oil people, who were saying that he had tried to be good and keep solid with the administration, but that now he was going to get the same dose as other people who had not followed such policy; that very serious financial interests were involved in this proposed suit; that the company borrows annually about $20,000,000 abroad for the carrying of their foreign business; that upon the publication of the proposed action by the Department of Justice the foreign financiers had refused to extend this accommodation, and that the money would have to be raised now in New York under great disadvantage, and that as a result it might readily happen that several of their important plants would be closed and a number of thousand men thrown out of employment, and especially that the foreign trade in harvesting implements that had been developed almost entirely by the International Harvester Co. would be lost; that the company employs over 25,000 men, exclusive of selling agents, and does an annual business of over a hundred million dollars.

He concluded with great emphasis with the remark that if, after all the endeavors of this company and the other Morgan interests to uphold the policy of the administration and to adopt their methods of modern publicity, this company was now to be attacked in a purely technical case, the interests he represented were "going to fight."

So far as I have knowledge of the facts set forth by Mr. Perkins, I believe them to be true. I have no knowledge of any moral grounds for attacks on the company. The few complaints received by the bureau have been attributable almost entirely to two sources, to wit, in the first place, to certain trade papers which have been deprived of advertisement and whose object seems to be blackmail, and, second, to the general feeling against any sort of combination. As to the legal question, whether this company's organization has been per se a violation of the Sherman law, I am not particularly interested, nor have I any fixed opinion on the subject.

I therefore feel that the starting of a suit under the Sherman law against this company would, in the first place, be a moral injustice, and, in the second place, would be a reversal of the correct and advanced modern policy of the President in dealing with corporate business. It is submitted that this case raises acutely a question of general policy of great importance, which must be, I think, determined now, and for which this case will stand as a precedent. This case raises the question included in what the President has called "good and bad trusts"; the question whether mere combination, as such, shall be prohibited; whether the Government is going to try to forbid all combinations regardless of their methods or ends, or whether, on the other hand, it is going to pursue the policy, frequently stated by the President, of regulation and control rather than of prohibition. It is submitted that two wholly inconsistent principles are brought here in conflict. One or the other must give way. If the principle illustrated by this proposed case against the Harvester Co. is to be followed, it is believed that the principle for which the Bureau of Corporations stands must be abandoned and its work substantially cease. It is impossible both to destroy and to regulate combinations. The choice must be made now between these two divergent policies.

As to which is the better of the two policies, very naturally I have a strong prejudice in favor of that represented by this bureau, but I believe that that prejudice is justified. I believe that industrial combination is an economic necessity, that the Sherman law, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, is an economic absurdity and is impossible of general enforcement, and even if partially enforced will, in most cases, work only evil. I believe the principle it represents must ultimately be abandoned; that combination must be allowed and then regulated; and that the best means of regulation is by publicity, aided by the action of the Department of Justice and of the courts in case of proven violation of the interstate-commerce laws and other laws which deal with unfair methods of business. It is not the existence of the combination power which must be considered, but the misuse of that power. A combination which maintains its power simply because it gives better service or lower prices and thus gets most of the business justifies its own existence and should not be hampered or attacked. It is for the public benefit as well as for its own advantage. On the other hand, a combination such as the Standard Oil Co., which constantly uses its combination power to cripple the efficiency of competitors by unfair methods of competition, by railway rebates, by subornation of employees, by local price discrimination, illustrates completely the misuse of combination power and the line along which the efforts of the Government should be directed.

As to the effectiveness of the two methods, the balance is equally heavy on the side of the modern method of publicity, of prevention rather than penalty. The experience of this bureau has demonstrated the prompt and widespread effect of the publication of specific industrial wrongs, as was seen in the immediate correction by the railroads all over the country of the system of railway discrimination set forth in the report of the Commissioner of Corporations on the transportation of petroleum. Furthermore, this method corrects not only methods that are illegal, but also those which, though legal, are unfair and inequitable, a subject matter that can not be reached by the operations of the courts. Still more important, this method is preventive rather than remedial. The mere knowledge on the part of corporate managers that such publicity is possible and probable prevents the perpetration of many improper transactions that might otherwise be undertaken, and, most important of all, tends strongly to establish throughout the country the higher range of moral standards in business that must ultimately be the basis of any permanent reform in corporate management.

On the other hand, action under the Sherman law is confined to a single case; will almost always be protracted through several years of litigation; is often defeated by a legal technicality, and even if successful amounts in almost all cases to simply a "paper victory," without any real economic improvement, and as soon as the decree of the court is signed the combination thereby dissolved or enjoined can easily reorganize into a new form fully as effective, and usually more so, than the original one. The Department of Justice in such action can take no cognizance of the moral question involved, because the Supreme Court has laid down the principle that the Sherman law applies to a combination in restraint of trade, whether that restraint be reasonable or unreasonable, regardless of the nature of the effects thereof. Should the Sherman law be strictly enforced—were such a thing physically possible—it would not only put out of existence substantially every freight-traffic association in the country and produce absolute chaos in railroad affairs, but would be as destructive against substantially every company holding a majority of the stock of any corporation engaged in interstate commerce, such as the United States Steel Corporation and hundreds of others of similar companies. In short, should the principle which I believe is involved in the proposed case against the International Harvester Co. be finally established by the Supreme Court, we would have on our hands a principle that we should be glad to escape from at almost any cost.

Finally, this case against the company is a civil, not a criminal, one. Delay will not affect the case through any statute of limitations. If there is a good, equitable case against the company, it will be in a thousandfold better shape for trial after the investigation by the bureau than now.

These considerations explain and justify the attitude taken by the International Harvester Co., which attitude represents, I believe, that of a majority of the financial interests of the country. The cooperation that these interests have almost uniformly given to the bureau in the past leads me to believe that a majority of the great leaders of industry at present, either openly or secretly, favor, to a greater or less degree, the general policy of the administration as to the regulation of combinations, believing that such is the proper solution of the great industrial problems of the country; that while they see the need of regulation, they are right in claiming the correlative privilege of protection as long as they abide by the principles of fair business. If, now, by such a retrogression, through the crude theory represented by the Sherman law, these interests are shown that prohibition and not regulation of combinations is to be carried out, they will feel that there is nothing left for them but to fight, and their great influence will be thrown against not only this but any other attempt at corporate reform. In the specific instance involved this matter is demonstrated. The mere refusal of the Steel Corporation to give further information, except at the end of a lawsuit, would practically cripple the steel inquiry of the bureau. Unquestionably, such refusal would be the first step in the fight. While the administration has never hesitated to grapple with any financial interest, no matter how great, when it is believed that a substantial wrong is being committed, nevertheless, it is a very practical question whether it is well to throw away now the great influence of the so-called Morgan interests, which up to this time have supported the advanced policy of the administration, both in the general principles and in the application thereof to their specific interests, and to place them generally in opposition. The tremendous moral effect on other corporation managers produced by the past attitude of the Steel Corporation and other Morgan interests, in favor of publicity and fairness of operation, will be destroyed, or rather reversed, and the experience of these interests will stand as an example to other corporations and be cited by them against the administration, just as it is now being cited by the Standard interests, as Mr. Perkins states. I believe that Mr. Perkins's statement that his interests would necessarily be driven into active opposition was a sincere one; and, in fact, I can hardly see how those great interests can take any other attitude should this prosecution be started and the final adoption of this policy be made public.

Very respectfully, HERBERT KNOX SMITH.

The PRESIDENT,
Oyster Bay, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I send you herewith my letter relating to the proposed suit against the International Harvester Co. I found that in order to state the case satisfactorily to myself I had to be very frank in giving my own views, but I felt that you would pardon me for doing so, and I knew that the letter would come only under your personal observation.

Very respectfully, HERBERT KNOX SMITH, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, September 23, 1907.

The PRESIDENT,
Oyster Bay, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Mr. Smith has shown me his letter to you, which we carefully discussed, and which I thoroughly indorse, as it makes clear the position of the Bureau of Corporations, and at the same time, I take it, your own position regarding what you purpose to effect.

Should you determine not to prosecute this case against the International Harvester Co. until after the bureau has completed its investigations, I would suggest for your consideration the advisability of making public in connection with the announcement of this decision on your part, and as reason therefor, such a statement as is contained on pages 6 and 7 and the first half of page 8 of Mr. Smith's letter, with such modifications as would eliminate the more personal and specific references contained therein, and simply use it as a statement of the general principles which govern the administration in disposing of this and like cases.

Very truly, yours, OSCAR S. STRAUS.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., September 24, 1907.

Hon. CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney General.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: The President directs me to send you for your confidential reading the inclosed letters from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Commissioner of Corporations concerning the Harvester Trust. Please bring them with you when you come to see the President Thursday, as he wishes to talk the matter over with you.

Very truly, yours, WM. LOEB, Jr.,
Secretary to the President.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I have heard the statements made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] in regard to these resolutions, and I want to say that I have been desiring, with other Senators, to see the whole correspondence in regard to this Harvester Trust from the beginning to the end; but, as the Senator from Kansas has stated, the Attorney General declined, for reasons of public interest, to furnish it. I thought it was better to have half a loaf than no bread, and so I called for information to furnish which required no special delay on the part of the Attorney General, and he responded. How that resolution was transmitted to him I do not know. I have no information about it. After the resolution passed the Senate, I had no further concern in reference to it. If a special messenger was sent with the resolution, I am very glad that he was.

So far as the Attorney General or the President having anything to do with my introduction of the resolution, or anyone else, I want to say that it has not been my pleasure to see either the Attorney General or the President, or anyone connected with their offices, for 30 days, and I never have had this subject under discussion with them.

I do not know why the Senator from Kansas is so much disturbed about this matter, because these were official communications that were sent here, and I had no idea that the President of the United States would have an official communication about a great public matter that he would dislike to have known to the public. I thought better of the office than that. I am very glad the Attorney General responded, because many people are interested in the subject. All Senators on this side of the Chamber have been trying to get some information from the Attorney General for more than a month. If I had a notion that there would be any special and instantaneous attention to any request of mine, I should have made the request 20, 25, or 30 days ago. I feel very much complimented by the prompt response. If the Senator from Kansas wants any further information, so far as the conduct of the present President of the United States is concerned, in regard to the Harvester Trust or any other matter of public concern, if he will prepare a resolution and bring it over here, I will introduce it for him, and I hope it will have as speedy a response.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am not called upon to speak for the Attorney General or for any other of the executive officers of this Government. I think, however, if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] will look at the resolutions that have been presented here—the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and the resolution of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON]—he will find a marked distinction between the last and the first two. The two first resolutions call for information which the executive department for many years last past has held it was not proper to divulge. The resolution of the Senator from North Carolina calls for all correspondence and information they may have upon this subject—together with any and all correspondence, information, and reports of the Bureau of Corporations relating thereto from January 1, 1904, to the present time.

That covers a tremendous amount of ground. It covers all information which the Bureau of Corporations gathered under a special act of Congress; it requires the reports of the Bureau of Corporations; it requires the correspondence between the Bureau of Corporations and the Harvester Co., if there was any.

It will be recollected by the Senate that about that time, or shortly afterwards, a committee of this body was called upon to investigate the absorption of the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railway Co. by the United States Steel Corporation. The committee at that time called upon the then Attorney General for such information. It called the Commissioner of Corporations before it, and the Commissioner of Corporations declined to divulge the information which his bureau had gathered without being so instructed by the Executive. The Executive, holding that that law meant exactly what it said in terms and that the purpose of gaining this information by the Bureau of Corporations was to inform the President so that he might make suggestions to the Congress as to the legislation that ought to be had, the President at that time instructed the Attorney General and the Bureau of Corporations that that information could not be furnished, and it was not furnished. Although in the committee and on the floor of the Senate the action of the Executive was criticized, no definite action was taken thereon by the Senate.

That is the character of information, I apprehend, the Attorney General has not yet furnished; and, indeed, if he were to do so, it would require a long time to get together all the reports and all the correspondence with the different parties, including the correspondence between the various executive officers. So, it is no wonder there has been delay in answering the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina.

On the contrary, the resolution of the Senator from Alabama provides—

That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with copies of the reports of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and Commissioner of Corporations and instructions of the President concerning the proposed prosecution of the International Harvester Co. of America, made in the year 1907.

And so forth.

Evidently the only preparation necessary to answer the resolution was to turn to the files of that particular year or to the files of that particular case and send the papers to Congress. So, I think it ought not to be imputed either to the Senator from Alabama or to the Attorney General that either of them had entered into a hurried conspiracy to furnish this information for use to-day or to-morrow or on any other particular day.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming construes a defense for the Attorney General which that officer does not claim himself.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I beg pardon. "The Senator from Wyoming" is construing no defense for the Attorney General.

Mr. BRISTOW. On the 16th day of March a resolution, almost verbatim with the resolution introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], was introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. That resolution called upon the Attorney General for exactly the same information as did the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina, and the Attorney General in his reply to this letter, on March 25, says:

In reply I am directed by the President to say that, in my opinion, it is not compatible with the public interests to lay before the Senate the correspondence and information relating to the International Harvester Co. in the possession of this department nor the correspondence, information, and reports of the Bureau of Corporations relating thereto.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is exactly what I called attention to.

Mr. BRISTOW. That resolution was repeated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] on the 22d of April; then it was repeated on the 24th of April by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON], omitting the request for the correspondence of the present Attorney General—only asking for the correspondence in 1907.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I must protest that my position shall not be misstated. The two resolutions do not ask for the same information. The last resolution, that of yesterday, asks for information in relation to the prosecution of the trust, directed to a particular state of things, not to the general files of the bureau.

Mr. BRISTOW. The resolution yesterday asked for information concerning the relation of the former President, his Attorney General, and the Bureau of Corporations with the International Harvester Trust. The resolutions introduced by the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from North Carolina asked for the correspondence, the reports, and so forth, of both the preceding and the present Attorney General. The only difference is that the former resolutions covered both administrations, and what was asked for by those resolutions it was not compatible with the public interest to furnish; but the information called for by the resolution which covered the former administration it was entirely compatible to furnish, and is furnished, ready-made, by photographic copies.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I know that the Senator from Kansas does not willfully misstate my position, nor does he willfully misstate the inquiry. The inquiry of yesterday was directed absolutely, entirely, and solely to the proposed prosecution of the International Harvester Co. of America, made in the year 1907. That was all it was directed to; not the general prosecution of the Harvester Trust, not the general record of the Bureau of Corporations, not the general records of the Department of Justice, but solely and entirely concerning the proposed prosecution of the International Harvester Co. of America, made in the year 1907.

Mr. BRISTOW. Nineteen hundred and seven, but not in 1911 or 1912.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Would the Senator from Kansas have the Attorney General, in answer to a resolution, go outside the resolution and answer as to other matters which the Attorney General has already said and the President has said are not compatible with the public interests to be furnished?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Wyoming has exactly the same understanding that I have in regard to this matter. I am simply calling attention to the fact that, in the opinion of the present Attorney General, it is not incompatible now with the public interests to give the private correspondence of his predecessor, but it is incompatible with the public interests to give his own correspondence with the Harvester Trust.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator, in making that statement, to show where the Attorney General says it is incompatible with the public interests to give his correspondence with the Harvester Trust.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will read it, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I would like to have the Senator read it and read it very carefully.

Mr. BRISTOW (reading)—

In reply I am directed by the President to say——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In reply to what?

Mr. BRISTOW. In reply to the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator read the resolution?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will. It is as follows:

Whereas it is reported that there is pending before the Department of Justice a settlement between the United States and the International Harvester Co. by which the so-called Harvester Trust may be permitted to reorganize and to bring its organization and business within the Sherman antitrust law as construed by the Supreme Court: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, instructed to lay before the Senate all correspondence and information he may have upon this subject, together with any and all correspondence, information, and reports of the Bureau of Corporations relating thereto from January 1, 1904, to the present time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, that is exactly the distinction to which I wanted to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas. The prior administration has held that the records of the Bureau of Corporations, which are mentioned in the resolution which the Senator has just read, are not for the public eye, but they are solely, as the law which created them says, for the information of the Executive in making recommendations to Congress, and the prior administration has held in the case of an investigating committee of this body that the records of that bureau could not be furnished, that it was incompatible with the public interests to do so. But the resolution of yesterday says nothing about that. The resolution of yesterday says nothing about the records of the Bureau of Corporations. Therefore the Attorney General, from his point of view, was justified. I will say that I am not in accord with the Attorney General on the proposition. I agree with neither the Attorney General of this administration nor the Attorney General of the previous administration, because I believe that the records of the bureau should be open; but it has been held by both that it is not compatible with the interests of the public service to furnish them, and so they have not been furnished. But the resolution of yesterday did not include that very pertinent direction.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will just read the resolution of yesterday and let the Senate come to its own conclusion. It reads:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with copies of the reports of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and Commissioner of Corporations——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Go on. It does not end there.

Mr. BRISTOW. It continues:

and instructions of the President concerning the proposed prosecution of the International Harvester Co. of America.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is it exactly—the direction.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the reports of the Bureau of Corporations are to be held sacred in 1911 and 1912, why not in 1907?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, it is not the purpose to hold the records of the Bureau of Corporations sacred. The records of the Bureau of Corporations that are mentioned in this resolution are the records that bear upon the pending or proposed prosecution against the Harvester Trust; solely and only that. The former resolution called for all the records and information that the Bureau of Corporations had collected in relation to the Harvester Trust—two very separate and distinct propositions.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire of the Senator from Wyoming if the former resolution, introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], did not call for the information which was furnished yesterday?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; and for a great deal more. Therefore the information, according to the views of the President, ought not to be furnished.

Mr. BRISTOW. Would it not be more consistent, therefore, for the Attorney General, instead of saying, as he did, to the Senate on March 25:

> In reply, I am directed by the President to say that, in my opinion, it is not compatible with the public interests to lay before the Senate the correspondence and information relating to the International Harvester Co. in the possession of this department, nor the correspondence, information, and reports of the Bureau of Corporations relating thereto——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, there is not any question betwen the Senator and myself on that. I do not hold with the present or with the former Attorney General. I think all this information ought to be furnished; but I do not agree with the Senator when he reflects upon a Senator in this body, and reflects upon the Attorney General for pursuing a course of action on this matter which to the Attorney General and to the President seemed proper, and pursuing it quickly, while not pursuing a course on another proposition that they thought improper.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have said nothing to reflect upon a Senator in this body. I never thought of such a thing.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; the Senator said that the information was prepared in advance of the resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do think that the Attorney General knew that the resolution was going to be introduced, and had the answer ready. Everybody knows, who is familiar with this matter, that he could not have gotten it ready after he was notified that the resolution had passed; he certainly knew that it was going to be introduced and believed that it was to be passed. That is self-evident.

As to the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, that if I desire any information from the Attorney General he will be glad to secure it for me, I regret that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] do not seem to have that magic influence over the Attorney General which the Senator from Alabama seems to have. I will admit, without question, that if I desired information from the Attorney General or the White House in regard to important matters I could get it a great deal quicker through the Senator from Alabama than I could secure it myself.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator has suggested that I was hasty in my statement; that there was a reflection, possibly, upon a Member of this body. I want to read from the RECORD, at page 5553, what the Senator from Kansas said yesterday:

> Mr. BRISTOW. Evidently the letter was prepared before the resolution was introduced and the Senator from Alabama understood just what reply the Attorney General was ready to make.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to inquire if the Senator from Wyoming thinks that that is a reflection upon the Senator from Alabama? It had not occurred to me that it was.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think that is a very decided reflection upon the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BRISTOW. If it is a reflection upon the Senator from Alabama to indicate that he is upon such cordial and intimate terms with the Attorney General that he is conferred with by him upon important political matters, I then must apologize to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I am upon pleasant terms, Mr. President, with the Attorney General; but I repeat now that I never, at any time in my life, had a conference with the Attorney General on this subject of the Harvester Trust, either directly or indirectly, and if he knew anything about my resolution being about to be introduced he did not get it from me, nor did I know that he had prepared any reply. If the Senator from Kansas thinks those things, he does himself an injustice. He is a very suspicious man, I know. I merely volunteered to help him get information. I think that the Attorney General or any other official of the Government would give proper information upon a polite request, backed by the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, to add to the gayety of the occasion, I am going to ask that an extract from page 3836 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 44, be inserted after these letters. This was an extract published by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], beginning with "Mr. President, I have in my office a transcript of all the testimony taken up to Tuesday last," down through the balance of that page.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that a portion of the RECORD indicated by him be printed in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is asked that it be read, and though it will take some little time, if there is no objection I will ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. President, I have in my office a transcript of all the testimony taken up to Tuesday last. The attorney general, while here to-day, was interviewed by certain newspapers. His interview was offered to the Associated Press, but for some reason the manager of that great news agency declined to handle it. But I have a copy of the interview, and I intend to read it, not only that it may go into the RECORD, but for the information of the Senate, and in support of my contention. It is as follows:

"I am on my way home from New York City, and have stopped in Washington on official business connected with my department.

"I was in New York for the sole purpose of taking the evidence of George W. Perkins, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., in the ouster suit of the State of Missouri against the International Harvester Co. of America, charged with violating its antipool trust and conspiracy laws.

"The State secured from Mr. Perkins valuable and necessary evidence to make a case, and the State is now satisfied to close with his evidence.

"Among other things he squarely contradicted the evidence of Mr. McCormick, president of both the International Harvester Co. of America and its mother corporation, the International Harvester Co. of New Jersey. Mr. Perkins is himself a director in both of these corporations, and both corporations have the same officers and directors. The New Jersey corporation is the manufacturing concern and the America is its selling agent.

"J. P. Morgan & Co., through Mr. Perkins, promoted the merger of practically all the harvesting-machine interests in the country. The International Harvester Co. of New Jersey merged all the properties of the McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., the Deering Harvesting Machine Co., the Champion, the Piano, and the Milwaukee Harvesting Machine Co. The new corporation continues to manufacture the machines of these separate companies, preserving their separate makes and identities, and sells them at a uniform price, and there is now no competition as to the prices on these machines and the makes of other companies it has since purchased. The new company does 85 per cent of the harvesting-machine business not only of the State of Missouri but of the entire United States.

"Mr. Perkins admitted that the stockholders of each one of these independent companies which transferred its properties to the International Harvester Co. did so knowing at the time that they would be paid for the property transferred by taking and receiving stock in the new corporation, the International Harvester Co.

"Mr. Perkins further admitted that J. P. Morgan & Co., through him, controlled the entire business of the International Harvester Co. He further admitted that the new corporation after its organization bought the D. M. Osborne Co.'s business, because it cut the prices of harvesters and mowers abroad and at home.

"He further testified that he had kept his eye on the harvesting-machine business, and that the McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., with the prestige of J. P. Morgan & Co., could have controlled the situation alone had not the balance of the companies came in and transferred their companies. That being true, they can certainly control it now. He further admitted that William Lane, to whom the properties of all these companies were first transferred, was merely the conduit through which the title was passed to the International Harvester Co.

"Mr. Perkins said he was familiar with and controlled the business of the New Jersey corporation, yet did not know whether or not he was a director in the International Harvester Co. of America"—

That is the selling concern—

"This seemed strange, especially when the International Harvester Co. of America was the selling agent of the New Jersey concern and organized by him for that special purpose, and whatever moneys the New Jersey concern received from the harvester business it had to receive through the International of America.

"The International of America being a subsidiary corporation of the International of New Jersey, and both corporations having the same president, we have a novel situation.

"President McCormick, of the New Jersey concern, must contract and deal with President McCormick, of the International of America. Which corporation derives the better bargain? An answer is unnecessary, because the stockholders of the New Jersey corporation get the profits, anyway, and it is simply a question of which hand shall be used in placing the money in their pockets.

"Mr. Perkins, Cyrus H. McCormick, and Charles Deering compose what is called the "voting trust" and hold all the stock, not only of the New Jersey corporation, but also all the stock, save $900, in the International of America. They vote these stocks as they please, and it does not take a philosopher to solve the situation.

"The evidence of Mr. Perkins was taken in the office of J. P. Morgan & Co. before Alexander Taylor, a notary public, the evidence being reported by J. L. Roberts, of Marshall, Mo., the official reporter in the case. The only other parties present were myself and my assistant, C. G. Revelle, for the State, and Judge Seldon P. Spencer, of St. Louis, and Mr. Bancroft, general counsel for the company. The State, being satisfied with the evidence given by Mr. Perkins, will close its side of the case on July 12."

During the reading of the foregoing,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will suspend. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

After the reading was concluded,

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I also want to call the attention of the Senate to as far back as December 17, 1906, when

Senator Hansbrough, of North Dakota, introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Department of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to make an early investigation into the character and operation and the effect upon interstate commerce of the combination or trust organization known as the International Harvester Co. and allied concerns engaged in the production, handling, and sale of farm machinery, the investigation to include an inquiry as to whether the prices and output of such machinery appear to be or to have been controlled and regulated by direction of any particular individual or combination of individuals, by a corporation or otherwise; whether there exists at present a healthy competition between local dealers in farm machinery, and whether the quality of the same is on the average as good as in former years.

Then in 1907 there was a debate in the Senate in regard to this resolution. The same Senator had introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and is hereby, directed to suspend its investigation into the affairs of the International Harvester Co., under the terms of a resolution authorizing such an investigation which passed the Senate December 17, 1906.

It was stated then upon the floor and in the debate that the reason why they wanted the Department of Commerce and Labor to suspend these operations was because the Attorney General did not think that he could bring suit against this harvester company while this investigation was pending. It was stated then upon the floor of the Senate by several Senators that he ought to go on and bring suit, anyway. I will read just one little colloquy between the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. Hansbrough, and the Senator from Georgia, Mr. BACON.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I have stated, in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge] several times this morning, that the Department of Justice has but recently completed a very exhaustive investigation of this company; that it is ready to proceed in the courts, and that the only reason it does not proceed is on account of the courtesy—to use a different term, so that my friend from Indiana may comprehend it—the courtesy that is supposed to exist between the several departments.

Mr. BACON. But has the Senator from North Dakota information that the Department of Justice is suspending its operations in order that it may await the action of the Department of Commerce and Labor in response to the direction of this body?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No, Mr. President; not that it is suspending its operations, but that it prefers to proceed without interruption such as a report from another department might cause. The Department of Justice has an abundance of information already.

Mr. BACON. If there is nothing of the kind, then, I do not see how it can interfere.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have stated that the Department of Justice is ready to proceed with the case; that it has gathered enough information to justify it going on with the prosecution, and that the only thing which prevents that action is the fact that an investigation of the same subject is supposed to be in progress by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator if it is a matter of duty or courtesy?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator may call it "courtesy" or "duty," as he pleases. I am stating the facts as I understand them.

Mr. BACON. I want to know from the Senator if he has any official information that the Department of Justice is suspending its action in beginning this prosecution on account of the pendency of this resolution?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state to the Senator from Georgia that the Department of Justice knows nothing of the existence of this resolution.

Mr. BACON. That the Department of Justice is not proceeding because of this resolution? Has the Senator any official information of that fact?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have told the Senator from Georgia as clearly as I knew how, and I stated to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge], but I seem to be unable to make either one of the Senators understand, that the Department of Justice is ready to proceed if the Department of Commerce and Labor be relieved of the responsibility of further investigation.

It goes on. Then there is a colloquy between Mr. Clay, of Georgia, and other Senators in regard to this matter, and a demand is made for the prosecution of this Harvester Trust upon the floor of the Senate by a suggestion, and then comes this letter. It seems that these are the letters which have been published in this document in response to the resolution of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON]. The head of the Bureau of Corporations of this Department of Commerce and Labor, Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, it seems from this letter and from his former action, thinks he is independent of Congress; that he has a right to criticize the Supreme Court in its decision; that he has a right, as he thinks, to construe the Sherman Antitrust Act. I read this paragraph from him:

I therefore feel that the starting of a suit under the Sherman law against this company would, in the first place, be a moral injustice, and, in the second place, would be a reversal of the correct and advanced modern policy of the President in dealing with corporate business.

It is submitted that this case raises acutely a question of general policy of great importance, which must be, I think, determined now, and for which this case will stand as a precedent. This case raises the question included in what the President has called "good and bad trusts"; the question whether mere combination as such, shall be prohibited; whether the Government is going to try to forbid all combinations, regardless of their methods or ends, or whether, on the other hand, it is going to pursue the policy, frequently stated by the President, of regulation and control rather than of prohibition.

He also says:

I believe that industrial combination is an economic necessity; that the Sherman law, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, is an economic absurdity and is impossible of general enforcement, and even if partially enforced will in most cases work only evil.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina, because perhaps I have misunderstood, is the language which he has just read a quotation from an executive officer of the United States in connection with the law of the United States?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am reading the letter of Herbert Knox Smith to the President at Oyster Bay, N. Y.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was that received by the Chief Executive of the United States in due time?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is supposed to have been received by the President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it possible that I understand from what the Senator from North Carolina says that the Chief Executive of the United States assumes to himself the power to suspend the laws of the United States whenever in his opinion they are foolish or unwise?

Mr. OVERMAN. That construction might be put on it, I think.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or is it possible that I am mistaken about that?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am reading the document. Possibly the Senator is right on that subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is certain that his quotations are correct?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am reading from the document printed by Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the Senator from Mississippi is mistaken as to the date.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that without any statute to that effect the Chief Executive of the United States has ever asserted the right to recall a law, together with the decision of the court about the law?

Mr. OVERMAN. What I am reading is a letter from the Department of Commerce and Labor by the Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations, Herbert Knox Smith.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To whom was that letter written?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is written to the President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who was the President at that time?

Mr. OVERMAN. "Oyster Bay, N. Y., August 26, 1907"—does the Senator desire me to read that letter?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; but I wanted the information. Who was President at that time?

Mr. OVERMAN. Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And he received that letter and never wrote any rebuke to the executive officer who wrote the letter to him?

Mr. OVERMAN. The only information I have on that subject is his letter addressed to the Attorney General.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the Senator mind reading that to see how that letter was received?

Mr. OVERMAN. The letter of Herbert Knox Smith was dated Washington, September 21, 1907, and the letter from the President is dated Oyster Bay, N. Y., August 22, 1907. It is as follows:

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., August 22, 1907.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: Mr. George W. Perkins, of the International Harvester Co., has just called upon me and submitted to me certain papers of which I inclose copies. According to these papers and to Mr. Perkins's statements it would appear that the Harvester Co. has repeatedly, on its own initiative, asked that its business be investigated by the Department of Commerce and Labor through the Commissioner of Corporations; that three years ago the Interstate Commerce Commission decided that it had accepted what amounted substantially to rebates; that Mr. Moody, the then Attorney General, was about to take action on this report, but the Harvester Co. at once promised to rectify the practices and see that nothing contrary to the ruling of the commission was again done. This was satisfactory to the Attorney General and the suit was dropped. The Harvester Co. says it is in position to prove that it has lived up to this agreement made in May, 1904. The Harvester Co. advances this as a proof that if any illegal action is pointed out it will itself rectify the matter on its being pointed out. It further appears that last December Senator Hansbrough got the Senate to pass a resolution directing the Department of Commerce and Labor to make an early investigation into the character and operation, and effect upon interstate commerce, of the International Harvester Co., and that in January last Messrs. Garfield and Smith met various representatives of the Harvester Co. in New York, and a conclusion was reached that the department would begin the examination as speedily as possible, which conclusion was announced publicly in the press. On March 7 Commissioner Smith notified the Harvester Co. that the inquiry would be into the incorporation value of its property, securities, and the general management of its business. It appears by his letter of August 8 that Commissioner Smith has begun the investigation, but has not made such progress with it as he would like to on account of his being crowded with work. Mr. Perkins's request to me is that, before the company is exposed to the certain loss and damage that the mere institution of a suit would entail, this investigation by Mr. Smith as required by Senate resolution should be carried to completion. He explicitly states to me that there would be no intention to plead the examination by the Department of Commerce and Labor as conferring any immunity from proceedings by the Department of Justice

Will you see Mr. Perkins and Commissioner Smith, go over the matter in full, and report to me thereon?

Please do not file the suit until I hear from you.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How is that letter signed?

Mr. OVERMAN. Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. President then of the United States?

Mr. OVERMAN. President of the United States. That was in August, 1907.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Chief Executive?

Mr. OVERMAN. Chief Executive.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Sworn to observe and execute the laws of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then the Secretary to the President of the United States, Mr. Loeb, writes to the Attorney General September 24, following this letter of Herbert Knox Smith, as follows:

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., September 24, 1907.

Hon. CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney General.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: The President directs me to send you for your confidential reading the inclosed letters from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Commissioner of Corporations concerning the Harvester Trust. Please bring them with you when you come to see the President Thursday, as he wishes to talk the matter over with you.

Very truly, yours,

WM. LOEB, Jr.,
Secretary to the President.

Mr. RAYNER. May I ask the Senator who was Attorney General at that time?

Mr. OVERMAN. Charles J. Bonaparte.

Now, Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Wyoming that all of these records ought to be open to the Congress of the United States. I very well remember, for I was a member of the committee, he being chairman of the subcommittee sitting with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and others, when we tried to get some testimony that had been taken by this department, over which this Mr. Herbert Knox Smith presided, concerning the Steel Trust. We could not get it. We asked for it, and they denied it to us. They referred us to the President, who said we could not have it; that there were certain confidential communications; so we could not get it. It seems that this man Smith is there, bigger than Congress, bigger than the Government, and he is withholding these reports. Some five or six years ago he was instructed by Congress to make this report. He has never made a report to Congress of his investigation, and here we have been seesawing between the Department of Commerce and Labor and the Department of Justice; and when we are assured here on the floor of the Senate that the Department of Justice has been investigating this trust and is ready to bring suit, all at once there is silence and nothing is said. The evidence I have shown, brought out in this record, is that this Harvester Trust is one of the greatest trusts in America to-day; that they not only have bought out 85 per cent of all the harvester machinery companies in this country, but they have absolutely bought the patents on the knot tyers, so that no machine company or manufacturing establishment can operate at all. Here is a letter that shows the operations of this trust:

MEADVILLE, PA., February 18, 1907.

Hon. H. C. HANSBROUGH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of February 15, in reply to my letter of the 12th instant, received and carefully noted.

Replying, will say that prices at which machines were sold to farmers previous to the formation of the trust were about as follows: Mowers, $35 to $38; present prices, $42 to $45. Binders, $90 to $100; present prices, $115 to $125.

Regarding the quality of machines manufactured by the trust, will say that it is a matter of common report by their employees that their machines are not nearly so well manufactured as they were before the merger, and the complaint is general that there is more difficulty in keeping the machines in the field in good working order.

Regarding the efforts of the trust to crush out competition, will say that the same tactics employed in former years by the Standard Oil Co. are now used by the Harvester Trust; and when they are unable to hold a dealer to their full line, they invariably make a big effort to crush his business by arranging with some one to represent them in the same territory and then throw a very heavy force of canvassers into the field and endeavor to secure the business, and in cases of this kind the goods are sold at prices way down below the regular wholesale price, and in this connection will call your attention to the case of the Akron Carriage & Implement Co., Akron, Ohio, who, after a disagreement with the trust and their methods at the close of the season of 1905, contracted to sell the Adriance line for season of 1906, and they were able to dispose of five carloads of our machines, notwithstanding the fact that the trust threw a heavy force of canvassers into the field and kept them there throughout the season, and their employees reported at the end of the season that the goods they sold did not nearly pay the expense incurred in making sales, or, in other words, more money was expended in making the sales than was received for the goods.

Now, while they were not successful in driving our agents out of the business in the case of Akron, they made it very expensive for the Akron Carriage & Implement Co., and virtually there were no profits in the business for them, but at the same time they established their right to do business and are continuing.

While the trust failed to secure the trade at Akron, there are other places where they have succeeded and the independents have been driven out of business.

At Akron last year they offered to sell binders at retail at $90, and in some cases as low as $65.

Another method, and one quite often adopted to crush competition, is for the trust to offer employees of an independent company a heavy advance in salary, and whenever any one of our employees makes a good record in securing a nice lot of business for us, they invariably receive an offer of a heavy advance in salary if they will desert us and take up the sale of the goods manufactured by the trust. It is not an infrequent occurrence for one of our employees who is receiving $75 per month to receive an offer of $100 per month.

While employees of an independent company are tempted to desert and work for the trust, their term of service is usually very short, and after a few months they are invariably discharged or salaries reduced.

Now, while prices have been advanced on goods manufactured by the trust, the salaries of their employees have been reduced to quite a considerable extent, and very many of their best men have been compelled to seek employment in lines other than that of harvesting machinery.

Trusting that the information contained herein will be of assistance to you in bringing the matter properly before the Department of Commerce and Labor, and with best wishes, I am,

Yours, very truly, H. A. JOHNSON.

Yet there is no prosecution, and when Congress passes a resolution and when Congress asks for an investigation there is not anything except these letters that we have now in response to the resolution of the Senator from Alabama.

It had been stated in the papers by a gentleman in the other House, Mr. GARDNER, if I may call his name, that such testimony as this could be given, that there were such letters in existence; and another Member of the House, upon the floor of the House of Representatives, charged it. I suppose, in obedience to what was said there, the Senator from Alabama, learning what Mr. CAMPBELL had said and what Mr. GARDNER had said, desired to have this correspondence, and his resolution was offered by reason of what was said on the floor of the House. I suppose he introduced his resolution for that reason, and now we have the facts before us.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, ordinarily I do not care to participate in a sort of quasi political discussion, as this seems to be, but in the interest of the truth and in order that the Senate may be informed of the true situation, I ask leave to call the attention of the Senate to certain facts.

In the session of 1902–3 we passed here in the Senate a bill creating a Department of Commerce. While it provided for a great many bureaus, took up many bureaus from the other departments and gathered them into this new department, and while it provided for some new bureaus as it passed the Senate, it did not provide for a Bureau of Corporations. When the bill went to the House a brief paragraph was put in creating a Bureau of Corporations, but giving it little or no power. The bill came back here with that amendment and some other amendments. It went into conference. I was chairman of the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, the original bill being a bill that I had introduced and helped to steer through the Senate.

While the bill was pending in conference—and inasmuch as this is public business I am violating no secrecy—the President sent for me and said that this Bureau of Corporations was not equipped with sufficient power and that paragraph in the House amendments ought to be amended. I suggested to him that we had better have an amendment prepared such as he thought would be appropriate for the case. He said that he would direct a member of his Cabinet to do it. I came down the next day, I think, and he handed me an amendment which included what I shall read now—

The said commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint-stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations excepting common carriers subject to "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States—as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce and to report such data to the President from time to time as he shall require—

Now, listen to this language—and the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct, shall be made public.

I demurred against that part of the paragraph; but I was told that the only way to get full information was to leave it with the President to determine whether such information should be made public or not. In other words, it was to be the basis of presidential recommendation for legislation. We had some difficulty on the conference committee. We finally agreed to it. So that provision, under which both President Roosevelt and President Taft have acted, is based upon this legislation that I have quoted, and I have given you the origin of it.

Immediately following the panic of 1907, the question came before the Judiciary Committee of investigating the merger and consolidation of the Tennessee Iron & Coal Co. with what is commonly called the Steel Trust. While that investigation was pending it was referred to a subcommittee, I think, of five or seven; I am not sure which. I was a member of the subcommittee. We tried to get information about the so-called Steel Trust from the Bureau of Corporations. We applied directly to Commissioner Smith. He refused to furnish us information, referred us to the President, and from that source we could get nothing. We got this information, however, that the President directed Commissioner Smith to send all the papers relating to the matter to the White House, and that he got the papers down there at the White House, and, to use a slang phrase, "sat down" on them there. We never got any further.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, that application was made, I understand, by the committee.

Mr. NELSON. It was made by the committee.

Mr. BACON. Not by the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. It was made in regular form by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. The request was made by the subcommittee.

Mr. NELSON. Perhaps by the subcommittee.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have the proceedings in my hand.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] was a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My astonishment grows momentarily. I am anxious to satisfy my curiosity. Who was at that time President of the United States? Who "sat down" on you?

Mr. NELSON. At the time of this occurrence Roosevelt was President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And he is the Chief Executive of the United States who at that time "sat down" upon the sources of information?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; under this paragraph of the law that I have quoted, which was put into the law at his suggestion.

Now, I am not talking for political purposes. I have only this to say, that in what President Taft has done in this matter, if it is a subject of criticism, he has done nothing worse than his predecessor, President Roosevelt, did. If there is now being withheld the result of the investigation of the Bureau of Corporations in reference to the Harvester Trust, it is exactly the same thing that President Roosevelt did in reference to the so-called Steel Trust.

Mr. President, I remember very well how much put out we were about the fact that we could not get the data in that case from Commissioner Smith. I presume it is on the same ground and on the same basis that Theodore Roosevelt acted that President Taft has acted. So if one is guilty, the guilt of Taft comes from following an evil example that has been set by his predecessor—an evil example originating in the legislation of the character I have indicated. I do not see how under those circumstances anyone can fairly and justly criticize President Taft.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Minnesota mean to say that if Roosevelt did an evil thing, that establishes a precedent which ought to be followed by other Presidents?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, I am not here to lay down any moral code.

Mr. REED. Or that it furnishes any palliation?

Mr. NELSON. I am simply here to give a few bald, naked facts to the Senate.

Mr. REED. But it was the Senator's conclusion I was suggesting.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Missouri will have to apply his own moral code to this proposition.

Mr. REED. I was anxious to ascertain if the Senator from Minnesota had any moral code that he would apply to it.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is perfectly apparent that there is no disposition here to criticize President Taft on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I, for one, would protest against that ex cathedra utterance of the Senator from Kansas. If he can show me that in part the present President of the United States has traveled in the same pathway that the ex-President traveled in, as just a moment ago was indicated by the Senator from Minnesota, whose honesty and patriotism are recognized by every Member of this body, I will condemn the present President as fully as the ex-President. I protest against the right of the Senator from Kansas to blanket all of us in that ex cathedra way with indifference to the public service. I remember, if the Senator from Kansas does not, that one King of England lost his head and that another lost his throne because he dared set up his individual judgment against the law of England, and I protest that the Senator from Kansas has not the right to blanket me at any rate with indifference to executive suspension of laws by any President of the United States, this one or the other one. I hope the Senator will not be so unjust as to continue that sort of affirmation.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Kansas has no desire or intention of being unjust. From the statements made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], it seems that the ex-President and the present President are entirely within the law in withholding information from the Senate. It seems that the present President has complied with the law, so far as his own administration is concerned, but he did not think it incompatible with the public interests to print letters which were inclosed by the Secretary of the former President, the immediate predecessor of the present President, to his Attorney General, which letters accompanied the inclosures, as follows:

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., September 24, 1907.

Hon. CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney General.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: The President directs me to send you for your confidential reading the inclosed letters from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Commissioner of Corporations concerning the Harvester Trust. Please bring them with you when you come to see the President Thursday, as he wishes to talk the matter over with you.

Very truly, yours,
WM. LOEB, Jr.,
Secretary to the President.

This information or this correspondence, the confidential correspondence of his predecessor with the Chief of the Bureau of Corporations and the Attorney General, the present President thinks perfectly proper and appropriate to expose to the public, but he has not yet seen fit to furnish the Senate the information which is asked concerning his own administration. That is the only criticism that I have made here at all, for the President, according to law, seems to have had a perfect right to withhold information which the Senate asked. That is within his power.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course I have no brief to defend any Republican President of the United States, nor am I undertaking to defend this one; but in connection with the charge against the other one—the one who preceded him—I would ask the Senator from Kansas this question: Does he think that private and confidential correspondence between the Chief Executive of a great Nation and the head of a paid Government bureau ought to be regarded as sacred to the extent of not being communicated to the American people upon demand by the legislative department of the Government, and does he not really think that the present Republican President of the United States would have violated his duty to the American people if he had failed to give to them this so-called confidential private correspondence about a public matter, which took place between a previous Republican President and the chief of an executive bureau, on demand of Congress?

Mr. BRISTOW. It seems that the Congress thought that it was entirely proper to authorize the President to withhold correspondence with the Bureau of Corporations if he saw fit to do so, and the law that was enacted authorized him to do so.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to this suggestion: Did not the authority of the law read by the Senator from Minnesota seek merely to keep this information from the general public, and was it the purpose to withhold it from Congress, or either House thereof, if it saw proper to request it of the President?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, if it comes to Congress, of course it is the general public, because it is a part of the public records, and they are printed and distributed everywhere, so that if there is fault in this——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the matter now before the Senate, sent here in obedience to a resolution of the Senate, concerns the correspondence had between the President of the United States, the Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; and that had reference to the institution and prosecution of a suit against the International Harvester Co. for a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. I can not see, as the Senator from Kansas sees it, how that comes within the inhibition of law read by the Senator from Minnesota. That law provided for the establishment of a Bureau of Corporations and conferred certain powers on the commissioner at the head of that bureau to make investigation into the affairs of corporations, into their business, their methods of business, and everything pertaining to their business, and to lay that information, obtained through the medium of such investigations, before the President; and the law conferred upon the President the discretionary power or right to give to the public the whole or any part or none of that particular information. This, however, is an entirely different matter; it is not covered by either the language or the meaning of that statute.

Mr. BRISTOW. I beg to differ with the Senator from Missouri. The principal part of this document is a long letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Corporations to the President in regard to the International Harvester Co., giving the results of his investigation of the trust.

I wish simply to add that if I were President of the United States it would have to be a matter of grave public concern, in which vital interests of the country were affected, before I would dig up the confidential correspondence of my predecessor with his secretary and his Cabinet officers in regard to matters which he had a perfect moral and legal right to keep within the confidences of the departments, and print them. I certainly would not do so for the purpose of securing a political campaign document.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this is rather a day of Democratic rejoicing. It seems to me that perhaps now we may find out what the Republican Party really has been trying to do with regard to trusts and corporations. This is a day of uplifting. There are more uplifters and reformers abroad in the land than there ever were before in the history of this or any other country. Imagine, therefore, my astonishment—my astoundment—when I found to-day one of the chief uplifters protesting against lifting up the lid upon a correspondence between a Chief Executive and one of his subordinates about the public business.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course the Senator from Mississippi is referring to me, I infer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, when I say "one of the chief uplifters" no one could mistake the fact that I referred to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to say here that I have made no protest against the publication of anything, nor shall I make any protest.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, I have thoroughly misunderstood the entire purport and length of the address of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. The criticism——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have hitherto been somewhat confused as to whether the Senator from Kansas was chiefly paralyzed by the suddenness or by the certainty of the information which had been sent to the Senate [laughter], but I have never been confused about the fact that my friend from Kansas, whom I honor so highly, and whom I welcome so gladly as a reformer of all American institutions, meant to take the lid off of everything and let the American people have full sight of it. I am not mistaken in that, am I? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Mississippi that my criticism has not been against any publications that have been made, but against the manner in which they have been made and other information withheld.

So far as this being a day for Democratic rejoicing is concerned, I will admit it seems to be; but the days for Democratic rejoicing are numbered, and I hope that our Democratic friends will enjoy them while they last.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, well, that is wise advice, for they may not last always. For that reason I am taking advantage of the present occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, it seems to me now and then that I am one of the stupidest individuals in the world, and the thought occurred to me a moment ago. It seems that I have been so stupid as to thoroughly misunderstand the entire purport, intendment, and end of the recent discourses by my friend from Kansas. I really did think, in my ignorance and stupidity, that he was protesting against the fact that the present Republican President of the United States had taken the lid off of some correspondence of a past President of the United States, equally, or shall I say "more progressively," a Republican than the present one. If I have misunderstood him, of course I attribute none of the misunderstanding to the lack of capacity on the part of the Senator from Kansas to explain himself; but in my usual humility I attribute every bit of it to my own stupidity and lack of mental concordance.

Mr. President, leaving out the little matter between the Senator from Kansas and me, to go into the question—a broader question—for a moment——

Mr. BRISTOW rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Meanwhile, however, before I go into it, of course I will consent to be interrupted by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will withhold my interruption for the present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. Leaving that all out, it seems to me that there are lessons in running brooks and rolling stones, and lessons even for the comprehension of machine, stand-pat Republican Senators in all of this; and it seems to me that one of the lessons is this: That so long as you try by bureaucratic methods to control trusts and corporations who are trying to effect monopolies you are making a mistake; that you must have a general law, and that that law must be prescribed beforehand, must be uniform in its operation on all, and either known to all men or knowable by all men who will take the trouble to inquire, so that there may be a government of laws and not a government of men; and it seems to my poor intellect evident that whenever you put the regulation or control of public affairs into the hands of a bureau, whenever you inaugurate a bureaucracy for the purpose of controlling trusts, or I care not what, you are trenching upon dangerous ground, and that whenever you leave to the discretion of an executive officer the execution of what ought to be a plain, uniform, prescribed law for the governance and guidance of all men, you are harking back toward despotism and you are retreating from the threshold of liberty and free government.

The apostle of the "Church of Latter-day Saints, according to the doctrine of St. Theodore" [laughter], long ago uttered this sapient piece of wisdom, namely, that you can not extirpate, you can not by law stop trusts, but that you have to regulate them by bureaucratic discretion, and that, in order that the discretion may be perfectly perfect—and I hope the Senator from Kansas understands the difference between the adjective "perfect" and the adjective "perfect" as modified by the adverb "perfectly"—in order that you may be perfectly perfect in this new way of doing things, it is necessary that the bureau should be subject to the absolute control of the Chief Executive, and that nothing should have the lid lifted off of it in the bureau unless the Chief Executive says so, and then, as a corollary to that great, sapient utterance of modern statesmanship, the late President added this, "Good trusts must be treated kindly and bad trusts must be treated severely"; in other words, that a trust—and this correspondence discloses the correctness of that construction—a trust which supports the administration must be dealt with leniently and a trust that fights the administration must be dealt with severely. That is all you can get out of it. I defy even the Senator from Kansas, with his acute intellect, to get one thing out of this correspondence except just that.

Perkins had been kind to the late President's administration. The Steel Trust had been kind. They both indicated that they were "in accord" with the administrative policy and administrative methods, and therefore the President advised himself, and he was advised by the Chief of the Bureau of Corporations, not to make them mad, because if they got mad they might fight; in fact, Perkins said he "would fight," and he said it out loud. [Laughter.] He said it to the chief of the bureau, and he commissioned the chief of the bureau to tell the Chief Executive of the United States, who is sworn to execute the laws of the United States.

What happened later with regard to the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., about which that honest man, whom all in this body reverence, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], has just told the true story? The bureau had been "seen"; the bureaucrat had been "interrogated"; the Chief Executive had been "seen," and he had been interrogated, too. They were good friends; it was a "good trust," and was not doing any harm. The President knew its officers were not doing any harm because they said so themselves. [Laughter.] They told him they were not doing any harm, and they told him they did not mean any evil.

> For Brutus is an honorable man;
> So are they all, all honorable men.

So the President said, "Not meaning any evil, we must not disturb these honorable men; they must be allowed to go on in their own way." There may be a "technical" violation of the prescribed and uniform laws of the United States, but it is not a real violation; it is an outward and visible misrepresentation of "an inward spiritual grace," and so we will not indict them—and that is not all—"I as Chief Executive of the United States will agree beforehand that they shall not be indicted." "Do I contend"—we imagine him saying—"as President and as Chief Executive that they have not technically violated the law? God forbid; I merely say it is 'a technicality' and a violation within the sound discretion of the Executive, with which the legislative and judicial branches of the Government ought not to interfere."

So, what have you after you get through with all of it? You have the most contemptible form of government in the world. The despotism of one wise man is wisdom in comparison with it; it is freedom in comparison with it. The rule of an enlightened aristocracy is heaven in comparison with it. You have a bureaucracy, an irresponsible government of irresponsible heads of irresponsible bureaus, reporting secretly to an Executive, who executes or not as in his sound discretion, or unsound discretion, or political discretion, or administrative discretion, or campaign discretion, may seem advisable. That is what you have got; and there is absolutely no release from it.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator kindly tell us what he means by "campaign discretion"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will in a second; but before I do that, I want to say that I stand here in the middle of this aisle—and I took the middle of the aisle on purpose—absolutely impartial. I have no leaning toward the "stand-pat" crowd; I have no leaning toward the "Progressive Republican uplift" crowd, according to the doctrine of special privileges under the tariff and other doctrines which the Republican Party has always stood for. I hate neither of them more than I do the other; I love neither of them more than I do the other; and, as a matter of personal relationship, I really do love you both. I do not spend nor misspend the time hating you at all; I pity you. [Laughter.] I pity you especially when you quarrel with one another, because you are both so evidently right whenever you charge the other with almost anything. [Laughter.] Why, Mr. President, when they charge one another with anything, so far as my experience goes, they never let up until they prove it. [Laughter.] That is the only reason why I have ever faltered in my loyalty to the democracy. We frequently make charges, but do not follow them up; we do not prove them; we are too little persistent; we are too charitable; we are too much actuated by the milk of human kindness; we hate to run a fellow into a hole and reduce him down to where he has no defense at all; but you have no pity on one another, and whenever you get into a quarrel of this sort I sympathize with both of you.

When I said to-day that this was the Democratic opportunity, I did not mean the Democratic opportunity for Democratic partisan victory; I meant Democratic opportunity to show equal tolerance and equal charity to both sides of the Republican divided household.

There is not a thing that you can say of one another that I do not indorse. [Laughter.] There is not a thing evil and misgoverning that you can say of one another that the recent history of the United States does not affirm; but you say it with too much vitriol; you say it with too much bitterness. You ought to say it with that good humor that ought to characterize men like me, who are "reasoning together in brotherly love" as colleagues in the same party.

Now I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I simply wanted the Senator to explain what he meant by "campaign discretion."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Campaign discretion?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That phrase is absolutely inexplicable, because it is so extensive [laughter]; but I will illustrate to you what I mean by "campaign discretion." I have forgotten how many candidates there are for President; but as near as I can remember there is just one—only one—who has never opened his mouth in favor of a reduction of a single tariff duty on a single article. Even the present President of the United States says there are excrescences that ought to be lopped off. "Campaign discretion!" Well, when a man indulges in that sort of wise silence about the tariff, perhaps "campaign discretion" goes to the contemplation of the possibility of getting campaign contributions from the tariff barons. "Campaign discretion!" Let us see again. Perhaps if I were President of the United States—I started to instance the Senator from Kansas, but I will not do so, because he is impeccable and I am a sinner, so I will take myself—if I were President of the United States, and wanted heavy contributions from the trusts of this country, I would see Gary, the head of the Steel Trust, and his associates, and I would find out what form of bureaucratic regulation of the trusts they desired, and then I would come out publicly and indorse it. That is another form of "campaign discretion," perhaps followed by campaign contributions.

Mr. BACON. I will take the privilege of reminding the Senator that he used the expression "campaign discretion" in connection with the question of whether or not a law should or should not be enforced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes. That has a historic precedent, too. Back in the history of England at one time King James II, who was a Roman Catholic and dissatisfied with the laws of England regulating religion in that island kingdom, concluded that he would go out and make friends among "the mammon of unrighteousness," to wit, the Quakers and nonconformists; whereupon he issued a ukase suspending the laws which constituted and established a church in Great Britain. Now, everybody to-day admits that the King was right in substance and 200 years ahead of his time. He issued an edict of religious toleration in Great Britain, suspending the laws of Great Britain which had established a church. It is true that King James II was least of all men a devotee of the principle of religious toleration. His idea was that he would split up the people who were supporting the then existing law and get part of them to favor the administration of the chief executive there by tolerating their public worship, and meanwhile he would suspend the public law against his own sect. The effort did not succeed very brilliantly, and some little time after he tried it, he concluded that he had better disappear from the soil of Great Britain. He did so. The Parliament of Great Britain met and declared the throne abdicated, and they declared the throne abdicated because as king and chief executive of Great Britain he had undertaken to substitute his wit, his wisdom, and his judgment for the wit and wisdom and judgment of the legislative branch of the Government of Great Britain—the Parliament of Great Britain—the representatives of the people of Great Britain. That was what you would call "campaign discretion" in the face of a great fight that was coming up; in other words, a use or abuse of the executive power in order to make friends for the administration by dividing the enemy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. A moment ago the Senator from Mississippi spoke of the attitude of a Mr. Perkins toward the then President as shown by these letters, and he referred to the fact that he had substantially notified the Executive——

Mr. WILLIAMS. That he would not play any longer unless the Executive made the Attorney General play right. He said, "I will not play in your back yard at all." [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the Senator, merely for information, if that is the same Perkins who was reported in the newspapers a few weeks ago as having traveled through a very severe storm in his automobile to bear a message to one Theodore Roosevelt, and if he is the same Perkins who is reported to have subscribed $15,000 to the present campaign of Theodore Roosevelt?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, I am mighty cautious, I am awfully cautious, about making assertions upon newspaper authority, because I have found out, by long public experience, that, although the newspapers never misrepresented me, so far as I know, except by now and then overpraising me when I do not deserve it, that the popular political mind is very distrustful of the truth of what they say. I can, therefore, answer the question of the Senator from Missouri only by saying that I have seen a pretty general newspaper consensus of opinion to the affirmative effect in answer to his question; but I really do not know Perkins. It has never been my misfortune to be very close to plutocrats of any description. Perhaps that accounts for my political purity and disinterestedness.

I do not know Perkins, and I have never been brought in contact with him, politically or otherwise, and I do not know whether he is the Perkins who did the traveling, or whether or not the Perkins who contributed the money is the Perkins who told the President that he "would not play in his back yard," unless he ordered the Attorney General not to prosecute him and his folks. Without denying or affirming that proposition, I merely say that, so far as I know, it is possible that the Senator from Missouri may be reaching the point of identity with his interrogation.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator whether the rule of idem sonans would not apply in this case?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are so many Perkinses. I would hate to believe that; because I remember when I came back from Europe, once, on finishing my collegiate education, I picked up a paper at Port Eads, off New Orleans, and read that one John S. Williams had been that morning sent to jail for stealing a ham. [Laughter.] I am not willing to suppose it is the same Perkins on the sole ground that it is idem sonans. Perkins, individually, is plutocratic and much reverenced, but the surname Perkins is too common to frame an indictment on.

I wonder if the Senate would forgive me if I read a part of the creed of "the Church of Latter-day Saints according to the gospel of St. Theodore." I wonder if the Senator from Kansas subscribes to this creed. Now, do not misunderstand me. The ex-President was always exceedingly kind and courteous to me. Personally no man ever treated me better. There is no man that I would rather have at Cedar Grove to entertain than the ex-President of the United States. I would take a perfect delight in giving him the best of everything I had. There is no one I would rather spend a few days with at Oyster Bay than the ex-President. He is a delightful fellow personally. I do not think that he is just exactly all that some of his utterances would tend to make us believe that he thinks he is, but still I think he is a very fine fellow in many unofficial ways. I feel almost tempted to ask the Senator from Kansas if he subscribes to this creed:

[Mr. WILLIAMS having learned with much astonishment that what he here read would be misconstrued by many Christian people, struck it out of the permanent RECORD.]

Are you going to come out and profess this sacrilegious creed or not? Are you going to come out for the third term, you standpatters, you people over there, if he is nominated? Are you going to bury every bit of the knowledge you have learned about American institutions? Are you going to support him because he is running under a party emblem? Are you going to forget what Washington did and said? Are you going to forget what Jefferson did and said?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One second. I am right in the midst of a piece of eloquence now. [Laughter.] Are you going to forget what Andrew Jackson did and said? Are you going to forget what William McKinley, upon the same subject of a third term, did and said? And are you going to forget that the only constitutional difference between us and Mexico and the so-called South American Republics consists in the fact that they reelect Presidents and dictators forever, so long as a fellow can by military or civil machinery reelect himself? Are you going to bury all that behind you just because of keynote phrases—"Progressiveness" with a big "P"; uplift with a great big "U"? There are more ways of progressing in this world than by hero worship; there are more ways of lifting up the world than by forgetting your own history and forgetting the history of the remainder of the world.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are more ways of getting ahead for the American people than by merely Mexicanizing American institutions. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will excuse me, but it seemed to me for a minute or two that I was going to make that exordium so eloquent at the hoped-for end of it that I could not bear to be interrupted; and I think that just at the time when I was growing most eloquent, if he had sat down, instead of looking at me with that peculiarly friendly expression of countenance, I would have made it eloquent sure enough, but he has destroyed my period. I now, therefore, yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Sitting back in my seat and listening to the eloquent remarks of the Senator from Mississippi about the ex-President, and to his reading of the prayer, and all of that, I could not help but sympathize with the Democratic Party. If Mr. Roosevelt should be our next President, you will get the worst of it on your side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota should not confine his sympathy to the Democratic Party. If the ex-President should be elected, the Senator may extend his sympathies to the entire American people; he may extend his sympathy, with pity bound up with it, to American institutions and the spirit of American freedom and constitutionalism. He need not confine his sympathy to one faction or one party in this great Nation; he may look ahead of him, as the Roman people might well have looked when Marius was elected for the sixth term as consul, and have seen what was necessarily before them.

Mr. President, the people have a right to do what they please in a free country; but even the people themselves can not avoid the necessary consequences of what they do. A step once taken is followed by its necessary consequential steps, and no amount of flattery or worship of the people themselves, no amount of imaginary devotion to ideal free institutions, can prevent a mistake made by the people or made by anybody else from being followed by its consequences.

God's only law to this world is this: That an act must be followed by its consequence. That, as well as I can decipher it, is His only predestined punishment. If ever you cut loose from the safe moorings which have prevented executive authority in the United States from becoming perpetual, from sinking into Cæsarism—which after all was nothing but the power exerted by the real electorate, which happened in that case to be the legions, to reelect and reelect again a Cæsar and then to elect his successor for life—if you ever cut away from the safe moorings which have prevented the executive authority of the United States of America from becoming self-successive, you may flatter yourselves and you may flatter the people, you may deceive yourselves and you may deceive the people, by imagining that your people are wiser and smarter than any other people that ever lived, which is not true, but you can not avoid the necessary consequences of your act and you will have sounded, in potentiality if not in actuality, the knell of freedom as translated into free institutions in America to-morrow. The Senator need not confine his sympathies to a faction or a party or a section, but he can extend them and in course of time, with his usual sagacity and wisdom, he will, as a good man must, extend them to the entire American people and their children and children's children, who will cease to be the example of law-regulated self-government to all the world.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I hold no brief to speak for the ex-President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, but he will be remembered as a great political leader, who has contributed in a marvelous way to the benefit of his country and to the elevation of its citizenship, after his traducers are forgotten.

The Senator from Mississippi has taken occasion to criticize severely the bureaucratic form of government which permits a President to withhold information for which the Senate asks, but that criticism should be directed against the Congress itself. It passed the law and it can not avoid the responsibility of that law by criticizing the President who followed it. The Senator very eloquently referred to the fact that two English Kings had lost their heads because they violated the laws of the country. The former President has never been successfully accused of violating the laws of his country. An action which an American President may take in the exercise of his executive functions may be criticized—it may be justly criticized.

But so far as Mr. Roosevelt's action is concerned, I have abundant faith in his ability to speak for himself and to speak effectively. That can be said of him more than of any other man in public life to-day, or who has been in American politics for a quarter of a century; moreover, when he speaks, his language is responded to by more American people as the expression of their sentiments and their judgment than is that of any other man living in this Republic. Why is it that he is sweeping such great Republican States as Illinois and Pennsylvania in their primary elections? It is because the people who compose the rank and file of the great Republican Party believe in his integrity of purpose as well as in his intelligence and the soundness of his judgment. Talk about the American people sacrificing their liberties and themselves in hero worship! Do Senators undertake to compare the American people with the corrupt people of Rome in the days of the Cæsars? Such intimations are an insult to American character. Compare Theodore Roosevelt's present campaign for the Presidency as similar to that of a Roman consul who had behind him the Roman legions. It is preposterous! If Mr. Roosevelt makes himself President, he will do so by responding to the well-defined public opinion that governs this country of ours.

We have but one sovereignty here, and that is the sovereignty of public sentiment, and it is an enlightened public sentiment. That Mr. Roosevelt believes in the integrity and the judgment and the wisdom of the masses of the American people is not a cause for criticism, but it is to his credit. The Senator and other high officials who now seek to discredit him by political collusion with Democratic leaders and erstwhile political opponents will discredit themselves, add to his laurels of victory, and make the American people love him more. Under their criticism he will grow stronger, because he has the everlasting truth on his side.

BARROOM LICENSES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JONES. I desire to give notice that at the close of the routine morning business to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 5461) governing the granting of licenses for barrooms in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the Senator to withhold his motion that we may have a brief executive session.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; I withhold the motion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 26, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 25, 1912.

The House met at 10.30 a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

How beautiful and how wonderful are the works of Thy hands, O God, our Father. What wisdom, what power, what majesty back of it all. How exalting and ennobling to the contemplative soul. And what dost Thou require of man for all the wonders and powers Thou hast bestowed upon him, but to love mercy, do justly, and walk humbly before his God? Strengthen us in our weakness, that we may fulfill these requirements day by day. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the statement read instead of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] asks unanimous consent to have the statement read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WM. SULZER,
HENRY D. FLOOD,
WILLIAM B. MCKINLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAMLIN and Mr. SULZER rose.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, in order to raise the question, I desire to make a point of order.

Mr. SULZER. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] has the floor. What is it that the gentleman from Missouri desires to do?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think I have the right to make a point of order against the conference report.

The SPEAKER. That is true, if the gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is what I am trying to do.

The SPEAKER. That is what the gentleman has the right to do.

Mr. HAMLIN. The statement of the conferees that has been read is not the statement that is printed in the RECORD. The Clerk read amendment No. 20. That amendment is not printed in the RECORD at all, and the figures given by him are not given in the RECORD. I think the statement ought to be, and must be, properly and correctly printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That is entirely correct.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Clerk to read amendment No. 20 again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the item.

The Clerk read as follows:

On amendment No. 20: Appropriates $400 for the International Railway Congress, as proposed by the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. The RECORD reads—I will call the attention of the Chair to the fact—that No. 19 "appropriates $5,000 for the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, as proposed by the Senate," and the next amendment, also numbered 19, appropriates $5,000 for the International Railway Congress, as proposed by the Senate.

Mr. SULZER. That is a mistake of the printer; that is all. We are not responsible for that mistake.

Mr. HAMLIN. It may be a mistake of the printer, but my point of order is that this report is not in order to be considered until it has been properly printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is no error in the conference report as printed in the RECORD. The error, if any, is in the statement which, under the rule, must accompany the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was at first under the impression that it was in the conference report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been universally held that the Chair will not pass upon the sufficiency of the statement which accompanies the report, but that that is a matter which must be determined, if at all, by the House. This report is correctly printed in the RECORD. It appears, however, that in the statement accompanying the report no reference is made to one amendment appropriating $400. I doubt if the House would attempt to say that under such circumstances the statement accompanying the report does not comply with the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rule requires that the conference report and the statement shall be printed in the RECORD. In this case it appears that what purports to be the conference report and the statement accompanying it are printed in the RECORD, but the Speaker has before him the statement, and it appears that that was not printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the rule has been uniform. It has been repeatedly held that the Chair will not assume to determine the sufficiency of the statement which accompanies the report. That is what is to be determined in this instance—whether this statement, from which is omitted reference to one amendment, complies with the rule requiring a statement to accompany every conference report.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I think that is not quite the question. If the statement of the House conferees had nothing in it about amendment 20, that would not be subject to a point of order, but the statement of the House conferees does have in it a reference to amendment No. 20, but that part of it was not printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SULZER. That was a mistake of the Public Printer. No mistake appears in the printed statement filed.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think there is no doubt of that.

Mr. SULZER. The printed statement as it is on file in the House is correct, but the Public Printer made a mistake in one item, No. 20, from which he left out the sum of $400. This error should not militate against the present consideration of the matter.

Mr. HAMLIN. Just a moment. I should like to call the attention of the House to what I regard as the reason of the rule.

Mr. SULZER. There is no mistake in the printed conference report as it appears in the RECORD. The point made is technical, and not well taken.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen will suspend, the Chair will read a decision of Mr. Speaker Carlisle, found on page 776, paragraph 6511, Volume V of Hinds' Precedents:

It is for the House and not the Speaker to determine whether or not the detailed statement accompanying a conference report is sufficient to comply with the rule. On February 28, 1887, the conferees on the river and harbor appropriation bill presented with their report a statement, as required by the rule, and it was read.

Thereupon Mr. William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, made the point of order that the statement was meager in its character and not a compliance with the rule.

The Speaker [Mr. Carlisle] decided:

The rule requires the managers of the conference on the part of the House to make this detailed statement; but the Chair does not feel it is in the province of the Chair to determine whether that report is sufficient or not. That is for the House to determine. Another rule requires that when committees report back to the House bills, resolutions, etc., such bills, etc., shall be accompanied by reports in writing. It frequently happens that a committee does nothing more than recommend in one or two lines the passage or rejection of a measure; and the objection has sometimes been made that these reports are insufficient, but that has been held to be a question which the Chair can not decide. The Chair can not assume the responsibility of examining all the reports and determining whether they are sufficient. That is involved in the question now pending, whether the House will consider the report. If it is thought that the statement is insufficient and that that is a reason why the House should not consider the report, that, of course, will control the votes of the gentlemen on the floor.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will permit——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. That ruling was made before there was any rule about printing the statement in the RECORD. The rule requiring the printing of conference reports and statements in the RECORD before they are considered is a recent rule, and it provides that it shall not be in order to consider the report of a committee of conference until such report and the accompanying statement have been printed in the RECORD, except during the last six days of the session. Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] does not make the point of order that the statement is not sufficient, but he makes the point of order that the statement has not yet been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HAMLIN. It has not been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. A reading of the statement shows that that statement has not been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is in error. The statement has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. The statement, as read, has not been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HAMLIN. The statement which has been read is not the same as the statement which has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SULZER. That is the Public Printer's fault, at all events. This is such a technicality that I am surprised any gentleman should raise it.

Mr. MANN. That is another question.

Mr. SULZER. The statement filed on the part of the managers of the House was clear and explicit. It was filed and printed in the RECORD in accordance with the rules, but the Public Printer left out one item of $400 to pay the pro rata share of the Government of the United States to the International Railway Congress. To dispose of the matter, however, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected in that regard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected so that the statement will appear correctly. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman this question: There are some matters in this report which I think the House ought to fully understand, and I think we ought to have some time to discuss some of these amendments.

Mr. SULZER. I will yield the gentleman such time as he wants to discuss any amendment. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HAMLIN. I want at least 30 minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Very well; I will yield the gentleman in my time 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to correcting the RECORD in relation to the statement?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, before I yield the floor to the gentleman from Missouri, I want to explain this conference report. The diplomatic and consular appropriation bill as it was reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs and as it passed the House carried in the neighborhood of $500,000 less than the appropriations for the last fiscal year and over $800,000 less than the estimates for the next fiscal year. The pruning of the estimates submitted for various purposes was conscientiously done where it could be afforded the most easily without present or future injury to any agency of the Government provided for in this appropriation bill.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. In amendment 32 the House appropriated $300,000, the Senate increased it to $350,000, and the agreement in conference is $340,000. How did the conferees arrive at the $340,000?

Mr. SULZER. I will explain that. The conferees on the part of the House made every effort to keep all appropriations down to the minimum. The State Department sent word to the Senate that if this appropriation was cut it would be necessary for the Government to discharge 42 employees in the Consular Service.

Mr. GARNER. Why did not the House committee have the information when the House made up the bill?

Mr. SULZER. That information was substantially before the committee. My recollection is Mr. Carr, of the Consular Bureau, testified before the committee that the department could not get along if any serious cut was made in the estimates; that the department needed every dollar that was asked for in the Consular Service and would use that amount for the next fiscal year.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman states that that amount of money was used last year. Where did he get his information?

Mr. SULZER. The information was before the conferees.

Mr. GARNER. I would like to have the gentleman put that in the RECORD. How much money was used, according to the statement of the State Department, last year?

Mr. SULZER. The information before the conferees was that every dollar appropriated in the bill for the Consular Service was absolutely necessary, will be used for the present fiscal year, and will be needed for the next fiscal year.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman just said that the State Department had told the Committee on Foreign Affairs that they needed every cent for which they estimated, and the gentleman said that they cut out $500,000 from the estimates. I want to call the gentleman's attention to another thing. In this identical item for 1911 appropriations, the only one we have an accounting for by the State Department, they only spent $285,000, although there was $300,000 appropriated. Now the gentleman comes along and undertakes to tell the House that the House appropriated $300,000, which is $15,000 more than they used the year before, and that the Senate increased it to $50,000; but the conferees were unable to secure an agreement cutting that more than $10,000, when the record showed that they used $285,000 of the 1911 appropriation.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I will reply to that as I go along. I want to make my statement in a connected manner. This bill was carefully prepared and considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and reported to the House unanimously. The total estimates submitted aggregated $4,449,697.41; the amount appropriated for the last fiscal year was $3,988,516.41; the bill as it passed the House, carrying the appropriations for the next fiscal year, totaled $3,418,791.41, which was a reduction of $569,825 less than last year's appropriations.

The Senate increased the appropriations $369,566. The bill as agreed on finally in conference between the Senate and the House conferees now carries appropriations for the fiscal year of 1913 of $3,638,047.41, which is $811,650 less than the estimates, and is $350,469 less than the appropriations in the last diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I want to call his attention to the fact that he has not undertaken to answer my question.

Mr. SULZER. I am coming to that, I will say to the gentleman. I am talking now about the money we have saved the taxpayers in this bill—at least $350,000 less than last year. Think of that. That is a considerable saving to the taxpayers of the country. I speak advisedly when I say that there has not been for years an appropriation bill from any committee which went so far along the lines of real economy as the present diplomatic and consular appropriation bill for the next fiscal year. But more. The bill as agreed upon in conference is $350,469 less than the appropriations for the current year—that is, the year 1912—and over $800,000 less than the estimates submitted by the department. That is a saving of more than 25 per cent on the estimates, and more than 10 per cent between the amount appropriated last year and the amount appropriated this year—quite an item.

This is the first annual appropriation bill to pass this Congress, and if every one of the other appropriation bills does as well as has been done in this appropriation bill, which saves the taxpayers more than 10 per cent between last year and this year, it will aggregate a net saving to the taxpayers of the United States for the fiscal year 1913 of over $125,000,000. That will speak well for economy. The record of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for economy this year speaks for itself, and deserves the commendation of this House and the taxpayers of the country.

Now a few words regarding the foreign service. For every dollar that we appropriate for the foreign service the people of the United States get back in actual money which goes into the Treasury Department about 15 per cent. But, as a matter of fact, for every dollar expended in our foreign service there comes back, directly or indirectly, to the taxpayers and the business people of the country a hundred dollars for one. Our Department of State is the most economical branch of the entire Government, and nobody can successfully controvert the statement.

The value of the foreign service to the Government, to American commerce, and to the individual citizen is now recognized and can not be gainsaid. It is no longer merely political, but it has become to a large extent an efficient nonpartisan instrument for the expansion of American commerce and the extension of American enterprise, securing for American commercial interests fair and equal trade opportunity with the peoples of other countries, and it assures to the individual citizen the protection of his rights the world over. It is through its agency that the entire business of the Government in its relations with other Governments is conducted; and, as I said, for every dollar expended for the foreign service the people of the United States receive directly or indirectly one hundred for one in return.

There is not a dollar appropriated in this bill that is not absolutely necessary; there is not an item in the bill that should be stricken out, and if it were it would subject us to severe condemnation on the part of the business people of the United States. I will do nothing to cripple the Department of State, which is doing so much for our foreign trade and commerce. It is a matter of gratification for me to say—and I know I voice the sentiments of our people generally—that there never was a time in the history of our country when our Diplomatic and Consular Service was so efficient and on so high a plane as it is to-day.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] calls my attention to amendment No. 32. This amendment relates to the Consular Service, and the amount appropriated is less than the estimates that came to Congress. The Secretary of State says that the amount appropriated for the Consular Service is absolutely necessary. We cut out $50,000 in the committee and the House sustained the committee, but the gentleman from Texas and I knew we would have to increase it ere the bill became a law. I thought $325,000 would be sufficient, but on the strength of all the telegrams and letters from the business people of the United States which we had before use, and upon the representations from the State Department, the House conferees compromised. We did the best we could, and finally agreed to $340,000 for the Consular Service for the coming fiscal year, a saving of $10,000. We believe that amount will maintain the Consular Service for the next fiscal year. It is doing splendid work. Nothing should be done in any way to hamper it.

We weighed everything that was before us and finally concluded that the department could get along with the $340,000 without crippling the Consular Service in any way. We all know the Consular Service comes home to every business man in the country who is doing any foreign trade at all, and if there is any agency of the Government that the people of the United States are proud of to-day it is the foreign service with the great improvement that has been made in its consular branch, which has become so much improved in recent years that the Emperor of Germany in a public speech not long ago said that the consular system of the United States was the best in the world. Let me say much credit for this is due to the present administration and also to the preceding administration, and I am broad-minded enough to declare that, so far as I am concerned, in the future as in the past I shall do everything in my power to continue to improve the personnel and the efficiency of our foreign service, and in so far as may be possible lift it completely out of the slough of partisan politics and put it where it belongs, upon the high, impregnable ground of the merit system, where talent, ability, competency, fitness, and experience shall be the sole qualifications for appointment and promotion.

Any attempt on the part of Congress to cripple our foreign service will bring down on us the condemnation of every chamber of commerce, every board of trade, and every business concern in the country that is doing business in other lands.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. There is no disposition and the gentleman from New York can not point out a single instance where the appropriation has been cut for the consuls. These are clerks to consuls—clerical help to consuls—that is provided for in this item. Now, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the year 1911 only $285,000 was necessary to maintain this clerical help, although Congress gave them $300,000. Now, if they could not possibly use the amount of money this Congress gave that year and yet come in this year and ask for an increase of more than $65,000 or else they will have to discharge some of the employees of the service, that statement does not comport with the printed report and the statement of the State Department, a statement conveyed to the conference committee by the State Department although we have not seen that communication, though I would be glad to have the gentleman insert it in the RECORD, because we would like to compare the two.

Mr. SULZER. Senator CURTIS has the letter. I will ask him to send me a copy. I will be glad to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will permit me, I have another matter to which I want to call attention. I notice there is another amendment on the part of the Senate—amendment No. 15—in which it uses this language:

> Together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this object for the fiscal year 1912, which is hereby reappropriated and made available for this purpose.

Now, it would appear from this language that there was some money, the amount unknown, because under this statute there is no accounting of the amount, but it would appear, however, that there was money left over in these three fiscal years out of the funds specifically appropriated. I notice that the gentleman in place of disagreeing to the Senate amendment in its entirety disagreed to a portion of it—1910 and 1911—and then concurred in the reappropriation of the money for 1912. Now, will the gentleman tell how much money that is?

Mr. SULZER. I will explain that. The estimates for the emergency fund for the Diplomatic and Consular Service were $90,000. The House cut that estimate from $90,000 to $50,000 and the Senate put it back to $90,000. In conference we would not agree to that. Finally the conferees of the Senate receded provided the unexpended balance for 1912 was reappropriated. On investigation we agreed that the unexpended balance for 1912 should be reappropriated. I am informed it will be about $14,000. I can not, however, say definitely.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. I do.

Mr. FOSTER. There is some discrepancy in some place. I am informed that the department has stated to the other body that according to their present expenditures, if nothing unusual occurs, there will be at the end of this fiscal year $30,000 remaining of this fund.

Mr. SULZER. That is not the information I have.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the information I obtained this morning.

Mr. SULZER. From the State Department?

Mr. FOSTER. Not from the State Department, but from where they had made the statement to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate.

Mr. SULZER. I think that is incorrect because——

Mr. FOSTER. I think not; I think the gentleman is hardly fair in saying that, because this comes direct from where they made that statement in their hearings.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from New York yield in that connection?

Mr. SULZER. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I do not understand just how the gentleman from New York can make the definite statement that $14,000 will remain from the appropriation of 1912 when the fiscal year 1912 does not expire until June 30 of this year.

Now, if you can determine, or if the department can determine, at this date what the unexpended balance is going to be on any item of appropriation on June 30, 1912, especially an appropriation of this character, it is some information that has not been given to Congress heretofore.

Mr. SULZER. I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] it is impossible, of course, for me or anyone else to say definitely just how much will be unexpended. There may not be a dollar left over, because it is quite some time between now and the 1st of July. The State Department had $90,000 for the present fiscal year. We are giving the department $50,000 in this bill for the next fiscal year, and if it has anything left over for this fiscal year we also give it that amount. I make no definite statement about the exact amount, because I can not, and, in view of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] says, I can not say how much balance, if any, there will be.

Mr. GARNER. Would it not be better administration and better policy for this House to pursue not to reappropriate the unexpended balance, but, if we make a short appropriation, let the department come back here in December and get a deficiency rather than to appropriate an unknown amount, which may be left over from appropriations made for this fiscal year?

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR REMAINDER OF DAY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. Inasmuch as the Chair is ill, he will assign Mr. SAUNDERS as Speaker pro tempore for the remainder of the day.

Mr. SULZER. We are sorry to hear you are ill, Mr. Speaker, and sincerely hope you will be quite yourself again to-morrow.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. SULZER. Yes. I will say, however, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that, as things look now, before the end of this year he need not be surprised if the State Department comes to Congress for a larger fund as an emergency matter.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to ask a question or two, but I will do it in my own time.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman will do so. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman from New York repeat his statement as to what the balance was for 1910? I did not catch it. I mean the unexpended balance.

Mr. SULZER. I understand the unexpended balance for 1910 was something like $14,000. I am not sure.

Mr. HAMLIN. And what was it for 1911?

Mr. SULZER. Something like $800.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order that we may get the matter in the RECORD properly, I hold in my hand a statement from the Secretary of State covering his expenditures out of the secret fund for the years 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, and 1911. Because the gentleman referred to the year 1910, I will take that up first. There was appropriated for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the year 1910, $90,000. The Secretary of State reports gross expenditures out of this fund on certificates filed under section 291 the sum of $82,345.49, and in settlements on vouchers direct with the Treasury $7,053.70, making a total expenditure out of that fund for that year of $89,399.19. If that be true then, there could not have been the balance of which the gentleman from New York speaks. In the year 1911 there was $90,000 appropriated for the same purpose. There was expended under those certificates, as certified by the Secretary of State, $98,104.51. He expended also, he reports, out of that fund in settlements direct with the Treasury on vouchers $5,747.49, making a total expenditure of $103,852 out of a fund of only $90,000. This would make an apparent overdraft of about $13,800. I think it is only fair to say that the Secretary claims there were certain repayments made to that fund, which left a balance in that fund for the year 1910; and the same is true of the year 1911. But in this connection I want to say that I know of no way of getting money into one of these funds excepting by appropriation, and that can only be made by Congress. I do not believe when they take the money out of the Treasury under these appropriations that they can go and put it back in whole or in part and in that way supplement or increase the appropriation. And I am quite sure that that is the opinion of the officials in the Treasury Department, because they have so stated to me.

I went down to see the gentleman in charge of the bookkeeping and accounts in the Treasury Department and asked him to show me how much money was in this emergency fund for the year 1911. He showed me that there was $90,000, the sum originally appropriated, and no more. I told him that I had heard that it had been in some way supplemented or increased. He said, "That is utterly impossible. There is only one way to increase this fund, and that is by an appropriation made by Congress."

Now, we gave them $90,000 for that year. If they expended more than $90,000, as they certify they did do, then there has been an overdraft on that fund, and consequently in violation of the law. If they take out of this fund, as I concede they claim they do, money that they find out afterwards they do not then need, and afterwards go and redeposit it and get credit back for it, then there would be no limit to this "kiting" the account and might make an appropriation of $90,000 be equal to $200,000 and still not apparently exhaust the real appropriation. If they can play "hide and seek" with the money in this fund, then there is no way to prevent them from taking money from some other fund and depositing it in this emergency fund, and thereby increase the appropriation from $90,000 to $150,000 or $200,000 a year. There is no way, if you permit a redeposit of money in this fund, to keep tab on this expenditure, because if they can take it from one source they can take it from another, and there would be no way of exhausting this fund. This ought to be stopped.

But let me call your attention to the fact that in 1911 there was expended on secret certificates, which is presumably to be covered almost exclusively, if not entirely so, by this emergency fund, $173,851.43 out of an appropriation of $90,000. Much of this, I am sure, was paid out of other funds and improperly carried in settlement by secret certificate under section 291.

Now, I simply wanted to call the attention of the House specifically to this kind of now-you-see-it and now-you-do-not-see-it practice down at the department with this so-called secret fund—a practice that ought not to prevail; a practice that this House is responsible for, because its attention has been directed to it and we have the power to prevent it.

This conference report seeks to reappropriate whatever surplus there may be left in the emergency appropriation for the year 1912. I object to this manner of doing business for the simple reason that we are appropriating an indefinite amount, if, indeed, any amount at all. We do not know what the amount will be. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], admits that he does not know whether it will be 1 cent or $30,000. I object to this way of appropriating a "pig in the poke." It may be $30,000, it may be nothing. If it turns out that there will be at the end of this fiscal year a balance of $20,000 or $30,000 left out of last year's appropriation, then I am going to take some little credit to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman in bringing about some economy in the State Department, because this surplus has not been shown before our committee got busy and exposed their reckless methods.

In 1911, before the attention of Congress and of the country was directed to this system of juggling the accounts down there between this fund and other funds, the Secretary of State certifies there was only $118.64 left after taking credit for "redeposits," as he calls it, in that year's fund of $90,000 at the end of the last fiscal year. But I call the attention of the House to another thing: The Secretary of the Treasury reports that there was a balance of $148.68. So the "witnesses do not seem to agree together."

The Secretary of State certifies that there was $118.64; the Secretary of the Treasury says there was $148.68. But in making that up he certifies that there is a balance in the hands of the disbursing clerk of $10,213.05. The Secretary of State does not certify any balance in the hands of the disbursing officer, but calls it a "redeposit" in the Treasury Department.

But on this question of reappropriating an indefinite balance I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], the chairman of the committee, if I may. The existing law provides that whatever surplus may be left in this fund for this year shall be available for two years for obligations incurred during this fiscal year without any reappropriation. Now, why do you want to reappropriate before the end of the fiscal year a balance, if there should happen to be a balance? If the Secretary of State needs this money for this year's obligations it will be available under existing law.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the balance for 1912, if any there should be, would be available for the purpose of this fund for the next two years?

Mr. HAMLIN. For all obligations incurred during this fiscal year; yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. But would not be liable for obligations incurred during the next fiscal year?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly not.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I should like to ask the gentleman to state his figures of the balance of this fund for the years 1910–11.

Mr. HAMLIN. I shall be glad to do that. But first I want to make myself plain. Any balance at the end of any fiscal year will be available to pay all obligations contracted during that fiscal year at any time within the next two years without any reappropriation. Of course, it would not be available for obligations that came up for any subsequent year. Congress is presumed to take care of those in the appropriation in advance, and we have provided $50,000 for the next fiscal year. Now, the Secretary of State certifies that there was a balance for 1910 of $14,502.48, but he reaches that by crediting himself with a repayment or redeposit of $13,901.67. I do not know where that money came from. The point I make is that he has no right to supplement or increase this fund by redepositing or depositing money that he may receive from any other source.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Then, according to the gentleman——

Mr. HAMLIN. Let me finish my statement. For 1911 he says the balance is $108.64, but he reaches that by crediting that fund again with $13,970.64 redeposit. Otherwise there would have been an overdraft.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Then, as I understand, the gentleman's contention is that, as a matter of fact, there was very little balance for the year 1910 and no balance for the year 1911?

Mr. HAMLIN. Practically none. In fact, there would have been an overdraft had not these deposits been made.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That for 1910 the balance was very small.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. And that in 1911 there was not only no balance, but there was an overdraft?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes. Now, it appears from information received that there will be a probable balance this year of $30,000.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Where does that information come from?

Mr. HAMLIN. This information was handed to me by a Member a few moments ago. I do not know where it came from.

Mr. GARNER. That information comes from the State Department to a reliable person under the Dome of this Capitol. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] secured this information and vouches for its accuracy.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I want to say to the gentleman that it was stated to the conferees by Senator CURTIS that he had obtained information from the State Department as to what that probable balance would be, and it was not as much as that.

Mr. HAMLIN. How much?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It was not more than half as much as that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Fifteen thousand dollars?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Between $14,000 and $15,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. Why reappropriate it now?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We consented to its reappropriation without knowing exactly what amount it was. We consented to it because the Senate conferees insisted upon the $90,000 appropriation or something in lieu thereof. They were insistent that $50,000 was not a sufficient amount, and they had before them a letter from the State Department saying that that was absolutely an insufficient amount for this purpose, and we reached an agreement with them by way of compromise. That compromise was to give them any balance that might be in this year's appropriation.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman is on the Foreign Affairs Committee?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. And I know the gentleman is a good lawyer. Perhaps he will not admit it, but I will.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman believe that the Secretary of State has a right to increase or supplement an appropriation that we give him for this or any other purpose by making deposits to that fund without any action by Congress?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I should say not.

Mr. HAMLIN. If he could do that, there would be no limit to the fund, would there?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I should say the Secretary of State certainly could not do that; but that is not the question we are considering here now.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is one of the questions which I am considering.

Mr. GARNER. No.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The question is whether or not we will allow the State Department the amount that is to the credit of this fund at the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman a question in that connection?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I can realize how the Senate committee may in a way have forced the House conferees to accept this kind of a provision, but I want to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia whether it is not, in his judgment, a bad practice for the House to reappropriate an unexpended balance, when the amount of that unexpended balance is purely an estimate and the House does not know anything about it?

Would not it be better policy to appropriate an insufficient amount, for the sake of the argument, and let the department come back to Congress in December and get the deficiency, rather than to make a haphazard appropriation now and establish that kind of a precedent?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. My position was in favor of $50,000. I was opposed to appropriating to this fund any more than $50,000, but the Senate conferees stood for $90,000, and this was reached as a compromise. I thought it was wiser to compromise than to hang the bill up by disagreement between the House and the Senate. Our information was, and that was not accurate, that nobody could tell exactly what the unexpended balance would be, because, as the chairman of the committee has said, there is some time between now and July. Our information was that the balance would not exceed $14,000 or $15,000. I do not see why if there is authority from the State Department for the statement that it would be $30,000, why the gentleman in the State Department who gives information to a gentleman under the Dome of the Capitol should not have their names given, so that we can see who is correct.

Mr. GARNER. I made the statement that it came from a gentleman under the Dome of the Capitol, and I am informed that you can get it from the clerk of the Committee on Appropriation, Mr. Courts, who has been here a good long while, and I think would be an authority in this House.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Does the gentleman think that the statement of the clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, that transacts its business under the Dome of the Capitol, should be taken against the statement from the officials of the State Department?

Mr. GARNER. I understood the gentleman to say that the State Department had conveyed to him the information——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER. Where did the gentleman get his information?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. From one of the conferees on the part of the Senate—Senator CURTIS.

Mr. GARNER. I understood the gentleman to say that the information was before the committee in writing.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The Senator had a statement that he was reading from.

Mr. GARNER. Could we get the statement, so as to see where it came from?

Mr. SULZER. I shall ask Senator CURTIS for the statement.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I can not afford to have all my time taken up by other gentlemen, however interesting the discussion may be.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to say that I could not say that Senator CURTIS read from the statement, but he had a paper in his hand that he was reading from that came from the State Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield further to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not want what I say to be taken as a criticism of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I believe that they are, in the main, to be congratulated on the work they have done in this matter, but I call it to the attention of the House and the country in order to show the mysterious management of certain sums of public moneys in the State Department. It is shrouded in mystery and covered by the veil of secrecy. It should be unmasked.

Now, the House fixed the sum of $50,000 as the amount that ought to be given to this emergency fund for the next fiscal year. This reappropriation of these mysterious balances of unexpended money out of the $90,000 given for the year 1912 is only an indirect way of increasing this appropriation. If the practice they have been following in the State Department is continued to be followed this fund could be increased to $50,000 more by making deposits from time to time to the credit of this fund, and on the last day of June they can claim that they have $50,000 left over, and if this amendment goes through they will have $100,000 instead of $50,000 to the credit of the emergency fund. It could be doubled and even increased more than that in this doubtful way.

Mr. SULZER. Does the gentleman from Missouri think the Secretary of State would do that?

Mr. HAMLIN. But he has been making these deposits. His report shows it.

Mr. SULZER. Well, I doubt if it will be done again.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope not; but I am quite sure that if the practice of handling this fund had not been exposed there would have been no part of the appropriation of $90,000 left unexpended this year. But the practice which prevailed in making redeposits of money from some source or other ought not to be permitted to exist any longer. Congress should control, absolutely, the amount of these different funds.

I wanted simply to call the attention of the House to this practice down there, and I believe that this amendment ought not to be agreed to. If, as a matter of fact, there would be no danger from the source I speak of, yet I submit that it is a bad proposition to reappropriate money that is already appropriated and stands appropriated until the 30th day of June this year. It is bad policy to go to work and reappropriate money before the end of the fiscal year. I do not believe that we ought to do it on any bill with any fund, I do not care what it is. Let us wait and see whether there is an unexpended balance, and then if it is needed for the next year we can appropriate whatever amount is required at the next session of Congress. I do not believe we ought to do it in the way the committee now proposes. It sets a very bad precedent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that it sets a very bad precedent. Is it not a fact that we did the same thing on the agricultural bill in the House and on the Army appropriation bill in the House and on every other appropriation bill that we passed in the House at this session and many times before?

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman mean that we reappropriated money that might be left unexpended?

Mr. MANN. Reappropriated the unexpended balance for the current fiscal year.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman think that is a good way to legislate?

Mr. MANN. I think as a rule it is not, but the gentleman referred to the matter of setting a precedent; and when the House has set the precedent, I do not think it lies in our mouths to find fault with a conference committee that agreed to that as a compromise. I am not criticizing the practice. At times it is desirable though in some items it may not be. I think in most of the items passed in the Army and Agriculture appropriation bills and in other bills it was a proper thing to do.

Mr. HAMLIN. Were the amounts definite there?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the amounts were not definite. It was an unexpended balance.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It would be impossible at this time of the year to state the amount with any definiteness.

Mr. MANN. Absolutely impossible.

Mr. HAMLIN. I know it is impossible, and that is one reason why I am objecting to it. Then I call the gentleman's attention to this fact: In the cases to which he referred there is no practice, I would suspect, although I have not looked it up, of increasing the fund by redeposits, is there, in the case of the Army and the agricultural appropriation bills, to which he refers?

Mr. MANN. I do not remember the particular items, but in some cases there are redeposits, where we sometimes make an appropriation, and in others there are sales to be made.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, yes; that is true where there are sales of property to be made, but I mean where the money is appropriated for a certain definite purpose, and then expended, and certificates filed certifying that it was expended and yet come back and deposit a certain sum of money so as to hold the expenditures down within the limits of the appropriation. That is exactly what is done in this fund—an unheard-of thing. I was surprised when I found it was true, and I have no doubt that it will surprise every Member here to know that is true, but it is a fact nevertheless. I have here in my desk now certificates, solemnly certified to, showing that there was expended this last fiscal year $103,852, and yet they had only $90,000 out of which to pay that sum. They seek to avoid the overdraft by showing that there were some redeposits amounting to $13,970.64. If this money was paid out, it was paid out, and that is all there is to it, and this money redeposited must have come from some other source. I do not know of any funds in this House, and I know of no kind of legislation that will permit an officer of this Government to increase a fund which we give him by making deposits to that fund from any source whatsoever.

I simply wanted to call the attention of the House and the country to the loose methods of doing business down in the State Department, with the hope that conditions may change in the future. I am satisfied that there have been changes to a certain extent since the matter has been agitated by the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, and that is evidenced by the amount of money that there is now on hand in that fund, somewhere about $30,000, and this near to the end of the fiscal year, instead of the fund being overdrawn as it has been for several years heretofore. But there is still room for improvement.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I believe the conferees on the part of the House did all they could possibly do in the conference in the interest of economy. The bill, as agreed on in the conference, carries an aggregate appropriation of $811,650 less than the estimates made by the State Department. It carries an aggregate appropriation of $350,000 less than the appropriation made for a similar purpose last year. We did think when we had gotten through with the conference that we had accomplished a good deal in the interest of economy.

As one of the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee my attention had been called, through the activities of the committee presided over by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN], to what I believed to be an abuse in the use of the contingent fund; and on the Foreign Affairs Committee I voted to reduce that fund from $90,000 to $50,000, and believed at the time that that was a sufficient fund of this character for the State Department. In the conference we were confronted with the proposition from the Senate, backed by a positive statement from the State Department, that they could not get along with one cent less than $90,000, which had been formerly appropriated to that fund.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. That was in the face of the statement that they would have a surplusage for this year of from fourteen to thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. It seems to me that it is not consistent for the State Department to say they could not get along with a cent less than $90,000, although they were not able to use the money for this fiscal year.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Why is it not consistent, when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] has pointed out that last year they expended more than $90,000 by $13,000, and the year before they practically expended it all? That is the way the question of consistency presents itself to me, and I hold no brief for the State Department, either.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Missouri strongly believes that much of that money was improperly expended and ought not to have been expended.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That has nothing to do with the question suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, yes; it has.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the gentleman will wait a minute—the gentleman from Texas said it was not consistent for the department to say it wanted $90,000, in view of the fact that there was an unexpended balance now. I say it is consistent, in view of the fact that in 1910 and 1911 they spent not only the $90,000, but, according to the contention of the gentleman from Missouri, more than $90,000. We had to be governed by the facts before us, and while we did believe—and I still believe—there have been abuses in the administration of this fund, we had the positive statement from the Secretary of State that $50,000 would not run this particular branch of his department, and we finally compromised with the conferees on the part of the Senate by agreeing to reappropriate any unexpended balance there might be for the year 1912. We were informed it was about $15,000, and that would make $65,000, or a reduction in this fund of $25,000. If it is as the gentleman from Illinois informs us, it will be $80,000, or a reduction of $10,000. Whatever the unexpended balance, will there be a reduction in this fund of a substantial amount? I can not think, in view of the money that has been spent out of this fund for the past two years, that there will be as much as $30,000 unexpended at the and of this year. The gentleman from Missouri pointed out that in 1910 they spent all the money and more and in 1911 there was practically no balance left. So I think, Mr. Speaker, in view of the facts we had presented before us, that the committee did very well in reaching this compromise with the Senate committee and the House will do very well in ratifying what the conferees did. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Illinois desire some time? I will yield him three minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I require any time, except simply to say I have been over this conference report very carefully, and I really think the House conferees have done credit to themselves in the report. [Applause.] Most of the items which the Senate had inserted which were in any way objectionable are disagreed to; the Senate recedes from them. Of course, there has to be a compromise on ordinary questions of amounts in appropriation bills, but I think on the whole the compromises have been in the interest of a reduction of the amount as contended for by the House instead of a large increase as contended for by the Senate, and I compliment the gentleman in charge of the bill on what he has done.

Mr. SULZER. I am much obliged to the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report, and on that motion I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks some tables or figures, to which I referred a while ago, as I desire to have them accurate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to insert as a part of his remarks the matter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

ACTS AND RESOLUTIONS, LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 603).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the President, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 31 of the act of Congress approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I have the honor to submit herewith copies of the acts and resolutions enacted by the Legislative Assembly of Porto Rico during the sessions beginning January 8 and ending March 14, 1912.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 24, 1912.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The message is ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

BANKING AND CURRENCY CONDITIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 504 (H. Rept. 600).

Whereas H. Res. 429 was heretofore passed for the purpose of directing the conduct of an investigation into certain of the matters covered by this resolution, and it has since been ascertained that said H. Res. 429 is insufficient in the delegation of its powers to permit of the scope of inquiry which is believed to be necessary as a basis for remedial legislation on the subjects covered by this resolution:

Resolved, That H. Res. 429 is hereby amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"Whereas legislation is now pending involving important changes in our national currency and monetary system and vitally affecting our national banks and other financial institutions, and various bills have also been introduced, and are now under consideration by Congress having for their purpose the amendment and supplementing of the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' generally known as the Federal antitrust law; and

"Whereas bills are also pending or under consideration to regulate industrial corporations engaged in interstate commerce through Federal incorporation, supervision, and otherwise, and legislation is believed to be necessary to further control the incorporation, management, and financial operations of railroad corporations that are now subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, including, among other things, the regulation of the issue and sale of their securities and the protection of minority stockholders; and

"Whereas it has been charged, and there is reason to believe, that the management of the finances of many of the great industrial and railroad corporations of the country engaged in interstate commerce is rapidly concentrating in the hands of a few groups of financiers in the city of New York and their associates in New York and other cities, and that these groups, by reason of their control over the funds of such corporations and the power to dictate the depositories of such funds, and by reason of their relations with the great life insurance companies with headquarters in New York City, and by other means, have secured domination over many of the leading national banks and other moneyed institutions and life insurance companies in the city of New York and in other cities to which they direct such patronage and over the vast deposits of money and of the other assets of such institutions, thus enabling them and their associates to direct the operations of the latter in the use of the money belonging to their depositors and the stockholders and in the purchase and sale of securities and loans of money by such banks and other moneyed institutions and life insurance companies, and that these institutions and their funds are being used to further the enterprises and increase the profits of these groups of individuals from such transactions and to augment their power over the finances of the country and to control the money, exchange, security, and commodity markets and prevent competition with the enterprises in which they are interested, to the detriment of interstate commerce and of the general public; and

"Whereas it has been further charged and is generally believed that these same groups of financiers have so entrenched themselves in their control of the aforesaid financial and other institutions and otherwise in the direction of the finances of the country that they are thereby enabled to use the funds and property of the great national banks and other moneyed corporations in the leading money centers to control the security and commodity markets; to regulate the interest rates for money; to create, avert, and compose panics; to dominate the New York Stock Exchange and the various clearing-house associations throughout the country, and through such associations and by reason of their aforesaid control over the aforesaid railroads, industrial corporations, and moneyed institutions, and others, and in other ways resulting therefrom, have wielded a power over the business, commerce, credits, and finances of the country that is despotic and perilous and is daily becoming more perilous to the public welfare; and

"Whereas the national banks and other moneyed institutions controlled as aforesaid are charged to have been, and to be, engaged in the promotion, underwriting, and exploitation of speculative enterprises and in the purchase and sale of securities of such enterprises, and in acquiring, directly or indirectly, stocks of other banking institutions and absorbing competitors and in using their corporate funds and credit for such purposes, either alone or in conjunction with those by whom they are controlled; and

"Whereas it is deemed advisable to gather the facts bearing on the aforesaid conditions and charges or in any way relating thereto or to any of the subjects above mentioned as a basis for remedial and other legislative purposes: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Members now or hereafter constituting the Committee on Banking and Currency, by a subcommittee consisting of the 11 members thereof already appointed under H. R. 429 and by such substituted members as may be from time to time selected from the members of the said committee to fill vacancies in the subcommittee, is authorized and directed—

"First. To fully investigate and inquire into each and all of the above-recited matters and into all matters and subjects connected with or appurtenant to or bearing upon the same.

"Second. To fully inquire into and investigate, among other things, whether and to what extent—

"(a) Individuals, firms, national banks, and other moneyed corporations are engaged in or connected with the management of financial affairs of interstate railroad or industrial corporations, or life insurance companies, and what potential or other power they have or exercise over such corporations, and how and to what uses the bankable funds of such interstate railroad or industrial or other corporations are applied.

"(b) The marketing of the securities that have been from time to time issued by interstate railroad and industrial corporations has been by competitive bidding or otherwise.

"(c) Changes have been procured in the general laws of any of the States under which such interstate corporations are organized in the interest or upon the procurement of such corporations, and for what reason and by what methods and influences such changes were accomplished.

"(d) Individuals, firms, national banks, and other moneyed corporations interested in or in anywise connected with such interstate corporations are enabled by reason of their relations or connection with other interstate corporations or with other individuals, firms, national banks, moneyed corporations, or life insurance companies, or otherwise to prevent or suppress competition in the interest of such interstate corporations, or to protect or assist the latter in preventing or suppressing competition.

"(e) Such interstate corporations and the individuals, firms, national banks, and moneyed corporations are mutually benefited and protected against competition and otherwise by the relations existing between them.

"(f) National banks and other moneyed and other institutions are directly or indirectly owned, dominated, or controlled through their directors or through stock ownership, official management, patronage, or otherwise by the same persons, interests, groups of individuals, or corporations that are also directly or indirectly interested in other national banks or moneyed or other corporations located in the same city and in interstate corporations that are customers of said national banks and other moneyed corporations.

"(g) The same individuals are officers or directors of, or were or are directly or indirectly interested in or dominate or control, or heretofore dominated or controlled, in any way, more than one national bank or other moneyed corporation.

"(h) The funds or credit of national banks and other moneyed corporations or life insurance companies are or have been used or employed other than in making current loans to merchants or on commercial paper, by whose influence or direction such funds or credits were so used or employed, and particularly whether and to what extent such funds are or have been employed: First, in the purchase of securities from bankers or others in any way interested in or connected with such corporations; second, in the guaranty or underwriting of securities or syndicate transactions, either alone or in conjunction with others; third, in loans on notes secured by bonds, stocks, or other collateral; fourth, in loans on or purchases of stocks of other banks or of any trust or investment company or financial or moneyed corporation; and, fifth, in any form of investment alone or in joint account with others.

"(i) Any national bank or other moneyed corporation, whether directly or indirectly, or whether through or by means of another corporation having substantially the same officers, management, control, or stockholders, or with stock paid for by the dividends of a parent or affiliated company, and, whether alone or with others, has acted as an issuing house or in offering securities to the public or to investors by prospectus, advertisement, solicitation, or otherwise, or has speculated or is speculating in stocks, and if so, the nature of all such transactions and the profits and all other details thereof.

"(j) The management and operations of the New York Stock Exchange and the New York Clearing House Association are, or may be, directly or indirectly, dominated, controlled, or otherwise affected by any individuals or groups of individuals who control or are influential in directing the use or deposits of the funds of national banks in the city of New York, or of interstate railway or industrial corporations, or life insurance companies, and the relations that the New York Stock Exchange and the New York Clearing House bear to such individuals and groups of individuals and to their financial transactions and to our commercial and financial systems and to interstate and foreign commerce.

"(k) Any individual, firm, or corporation, or any one or more groups of such individuals, firms, or corporations, may or can affect the security markets of the country through the New York Stock Exchange, or can create, avert, or compose panics by the control of the use and disposition of moneys in the banks and other moneyed or other corporations that are controlled by such individual, firm, or corporation, or by other means.

"(1) There is any connection between the relations of bankers, banking firms, and their associates to the railroad and industrial corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and the relations of such bankers, banking firms, and their associates to the national banks and other moneyed or other corporations, and the relations of any of these interests to any of the others that operate to protect such interstate corporations against competition or are or may be used for that purpose.

"Third. To investigate, find, and report the facts bearing upon the payment of political contributions to national campaign funds by or in the interest of national banks and interstate railroad and industrial corporations, and by all persons who are officers or directors thereof, and by other persons who are directly or indirectly in control of or connected with such corporations, together with the amounts of such contributions and the circumstances attending the same.

"Fourth. To investigate the methods of financing the cash requirement of interstate corporations and of marketing their securities, and the relations of national banks and others to such transactions.

"Fifth. Said committee as a whole or by subcommittee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and during the recess of Congress. Its hearings shall be open to the public. The committee as a whole or by subcommittee is authorized to hold its meetings both during the sessions of Congress and throughout the recesses and adjournment thereof and in such cities and places in the United States as it may from time to time designate; to employ counsel, experts, accountants, bookkeepers, clerical and other assistants; may summon and compel the attendance of witnesses; may send for persons and papers; and administer oaths to witnesses. The Comptroller of the Currency, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations, and their respective assistants and subordinates, are hereby respectively directed to comply with all directions of the committee for assistance in its labors, to place at the service of the committee all the data and records of their respective departments, to procure for the committee from time to time such information as is subject to their control or inspection, and to allow the use of their assistants for the making of such investigations with respect to corporations under their respective jurisdictions as the committee or any subcommittee may from time to time request.

"No person shall be excused from giving testimony or from answering any question or from otherwise disclosing any fact within his knowledge as an individual or as an officer or director of a corporation, or otherwise, or from producing any book, paper, or document on the ground that the giving of such testimony or the production of such book, paper, or document would tend to incriminate him, or for any other reason; but every person so testifying shall be granted immunity from prosecution with respect to any matter or thing concerning which he may be interrogated and as to which he shall truthfully make answer under oath upon such investigation. The Speaker shall have authority to sign and the Clerk to attest subpœnas during the recess of Congress."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and eighty-four gentlemen have responded to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The further proceedings under the call are dispensed with, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is recognized.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] if he thinks 20 minutes on a side will be sufficient time for discussion?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not. I think we ought to have more time than that. I have had requests from this side of the House for time, and I do not think we can get along with anything like that amount.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. How much time does the gentleman think he ought to have?

Mr. DALZELL. I think we ought to have 45 minutes on a side.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make this proposition: That I be recognized, and we will proceed for one hour, one-half of the time to be yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and 30 minutes to be used by myself, making 30 minutes on a side; and at the end of that hour I will move the previous question.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think that is sufficient time in which to discuss this question.

Mr. MANN. I would like a little time on this.

Mr. DALZELL. There are quite a number of Members over here who are desirous of speaking.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. How would it do to give the gentleman 40 minutes over there and 30 minutes on this side? The gentleman asked for 45 minutes. I think we can agree on that.

Mr. BARTLETT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I inquire of the Speaker what the proposition before the House is?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has been recognized, and the proposition before the House is the report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand, the gentleman from Texas intending to call up some point from the Committee on Rules, the point of no quorum was made, and while we have some anticipation of what will be before the House, the House has not yet been informed what report from the Committee on Rules is concerned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution was called up and read in the hearing of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Undoubtedly. The gentleman ought to have been here.

Mr. BARTLETT. "The gentleman" has been here as long as the gentleman from Texas has been.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The report was read in full in the hearing of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the report was read in the hearing of the House in full, and then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] was recognized.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman be willing to give an hour to this side?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am willing to agree to 45 minutes to a side. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] proposed that, and I am perfectly willing to agree to that. So, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to 45 minutes to each side, 45 minutes to be controlled by myself and 45 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered on the amendment and resolution to its final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] submits a request to the following effect: That debate on the proposition be limited to 45 minutes to a side, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to control 45 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] to control 45 minutes on his part, and that at the expiration of this debate the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution and amendments.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. One amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, if I may remind the Chair, the proposition of the gentleman from Texas was that at the end of that time he would move the previous question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That I be recognized to move the previous question at the end of that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition will be modified to that extent. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, as to this resolution, if the preamble and all the resolution, except a small part of it, is not the same resolution that was considered by the Democratic caucus and which was not favorably acted upon by the Democratic caucus when the matter was before it?

Mr. HENRY. It is not exactly the same.

Mr. BARTLETT. "Not exactly the same," but is it not substantially the same, with the exception of the last clause?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, no. I would not consider it the same, because one provides for a special committee, and this provides for an investigation by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, is going to discuss that very point.

Mr. BARTLETT. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker. Is not the preamble to this resolution identical with the preamble in the resolution which the Democratic caucus refused to adopt?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Very largely; but the caucus did not refuse to adopt it. This only grants a little concurrent additional power. It does not change the attitude of the Democratic Party at all.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is, in the estimation of the gentleman from Texas, and he has arrogated to himself the whole right to judge, without consulting the caucus.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I do not arrogate anything.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Committee on Rules has arrogated, I will say, the right to determine that question.

Mr. Speaker, I do not object, because I think as much time ought to be given to the consideration of this resolution as can be gotten. But I wanted to call attention to certain matters—a thing which I have done—and this is the only way in which I can call attention to the matter—that some of us who attended the caucus are bound by it, and others who also attended the caucus do not seem to be bound by it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to inquire if there is to be any opportunity to make amendments?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. One amendment, which proposes to strike out a certain portion. That is all.

Mr. LINDBERGH. What is that?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. From line 10, on page 10, down to the words "The Speaker."

Mr. LINDBERGH. I wanted to inquire if there would be any objection to striking out the following words, in lines 5 and 6, on page 4, "from the members of the said committee," and inserting the words "by the House"?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We may get to that a little later and reach some conclusion in regard to it. I am not ready now to take that up. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If this agreement is made and the previous question is ordered, that requires a vote upon the preamble as well as the resolution, without any opportunity to strike out the preamble, does it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the effect of the motion submitted.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman's agreement is made, and the gentleman at the end of an hour and a half is recognized to move the previous question, and the previous question is ordered, then there will be no opportunity offered to strike out the preamble, as there would be if the previous question was not ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands the effect of the motion. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which has been reported from the Clerk's desk represents the harmonious action of the majority of the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Rules.

The resolution is plain and speaks for itself. It provides for a thorough investigation of what is commonly termed the "Money Trust," and endows the subcommittee of that important committee of this House with full power to go into every phase of this great problem which we are now about to face.

In regard to what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has said, I wish to say that, in my judgment, this resolution does not contravene the action of the Democratic caucus at all. That caucus was considering the proposition as to whether or not it would clothe a special committee with power to investigate the Money Trust. This resolution sends all of these questions to a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and it provides for additional power, in order that the committee may go into every phase of the question. It does not encroach upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary, nor does it intrench upon the rights and privileges of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

If this resolution is adopted to-day, it provides for ample power being vested in the Committee on Banking and Currency, and does not rob any of the other committees of their legitimate jurisdiction and privileges. They may proceed with their investigation under the action taken by the Democratic caucus without let or hindrance, and doubtless they will so conduct their investigation hereafter. Let both sides of this House understand that if this resolution is adopted every phase of the money monopoly, of which we have complaints and of which the country is cognizant, can be investigated by this committee of the House, with the cooperation of some of the greatest lawyers in this country, skilled in the questions that are to be solved, and who stand high in the estimation of the American people. Therefore in obedience to the request of the Committee on Banking and Currency and in obedience to the instructions of the majority of the Committee on Rules, as the chairman of that committee, I have submitted this important resolution, and trust that there will be no opposition to it on either side of this House, in order that we may proceed to investigate that vicious system of financial monopoly that we know to exist in New York and other money centers of this country. [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Texas takes his seat, I should like to correct one statement. He is not offering this resolution in pursuance of any request of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I said the subcommittee.

Mr. GLASS. In the first instance, the gentleman said that, but just at the last he mentioned the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I did not intend to. I referred to the subcommittee of that committee.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO].

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, as the introducer of this resolution, a statement by me may be of some use and benefit to the House.

On February 3, 1912, House resolution 405 was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] for the purpose of investigating what is commonly called the Money Trust. Upon that resolution a caucus was had by the majority party, and, as a result of that caucus, House resolution 429 was reported by the Committee on Rules and passed by this House on February 24, 1912. House resolution 429 directed and authorized the Committee on Banking and Currency to investigate all matters included in House resolution 405 within the jurisdiction of said committee.

Causes beyond my control took me home. During my absence the committee was authorized to take up the investigation and pursue it in so far as it could within that time.

From the moment that resolution 429 was referred to the committee on Banking and Currency it was like a Pandora's box. Some of the lawyers on that committee contended that we had jurisdiction, others that we had not. Members of the House of Representatives were talking privately to members of the committee, saying that the investigation would be a farce. Members of the subcommittee itself—because the committee was divided into two committees—differed as to their powers.

I want to say that this resolution is not introduced by me as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, nor as representing the subcommittee, but as representing the majority members of the subcommittee.

Mr. SHERLEY. How many majority members are there in the subcommittee?

Mr. PUJO. Seven. Carrying out the action of that subcommittee, after consultation with eminent counsel, and after dispute and disagreement by and between the membership of this House, whether resolution 429 would give us power to investigate the subject matter contained in resolution 405, this resolution has been presented to the House for the purpose of letting it take such action as is meet and proper.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PUJO. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. This resolution 504 is the same as resolution 405, except with the addition at the end of the resolution giving it more power. Is not that true?

Mr. PUJO. Practically so.

Mr. BARTLETT. Resolution 405 is the one the Democratic caucus refused to adopt?

Mr. PUJO. Resolution 405 was acted on by the Democratic caucus, and resolution 429 expressed the views of the caucus.

Mr. BARTLETT. But resolution 405 was not approved by the caucus?

Mr. PUJO. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. FORNES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PUJO. I will.

Mr. FORNES. Is it not a fact that the subcommittee has already employed its attorneys?

Mr. PUJO. No; it is not a fact. They have not employed attorneys. The fact is, they have agreed to employ Mr. Edgar

H. Farrar, of New Orleans, as one, and Mr. Samuel H. Untermyer, of New York, as the other. They have agreed to retain them.

Mr. FORNES. Is it not a fact that since the partial employment of these lawyers was made this action has been taken?

Mr. PUJO. It was upon the advice of these lawyers, so that there could be no question of the jurisdiction of the committee to go into the investigation and bring a contumacious witness before the House in pursuance of the grant conferred upon it by the House.

Mr. FORNES. Has the compensation of these gentlemen been arranged?

Mr. PUJO. It has.

Mr. FORNES. Would the gentleman object to stating what it is?

Mr. PUJO. I will state that I have no personal objection. I want to make this statement: That one of the counsel said that the compensation was no object whatever; that he would not accept the employment if these additional powers were not granted, because he did not believe that the committee's investigation would amount to anything unless the additional power was granted. That was Mr. Untermyer.

Mr. FORNES. Is it not a fact, also, that Mr. Untermyer has had difficulty with some of these corporations, and it is for that purpose that he is anxious to bring about this investigation?

Mr. PUJO. I do not know it.

Mr. FORNES. I am so informed.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PUJO. These questions are taking up my time, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this resolution now before the House is not identically the same in substance as the resolution passed upon by the Democratic caucus?

Mr. BARTLETT. I asked him that question a moment ago, and he said it was.

Mr. PUJO. I so consider it.

Mr. DALZELL. One more question—whether or not this resolution was not drawn by Mr. Untermyer?

Mr. PUJO. The original resolution 405? I do not know.

Mr. DALZELL. This resolution.

Mr. PUJO. No. Mr. Untermyer and Mr. Farrar retired to a room and made some corrections in and additions to resolution 405.

Mr. DALZELL. Resolution 405 was corrected by Mr. Untermyer?

Mr. PUJO. No; Mr. Farrar, I think, made as many corrections as Mr. Untermyer. Now, Mr. Speaker, in concluding what I have to say on this subject, I consider that the effect of the adoption of this resolution is to merge in this subcommittee created by the committee all the powers that were intended to have been conferred upon the special committee in so far as they relate to banking and currency and in so far as they relate to the financial and monetary system.

Mr. FORNES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUJO. Yes.

Mr. FORNES. Would not you have the same power under the resolution adopted by the Democratic caucus to go into all these questions?

Mr. PUJO. I have so considered, but some lawyers say that we can not move a step.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. KINDRED. Will not the gentleman have his time extended so that I may ask him a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas controls the time.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this resolution and shall vote for its adoption. The resolution itself is a very important matter, but there is a matter in connection with the resolution that is quite as important as is the resolution itself, and I wish to say a word with reference to that. A number of times upon this floor during this session I have referred to caucus action upon the part of the majority on the other side. I am glad that in the presentation of this resolution we have the first evidence that the Democratic majority refuse to longer be bound by caucus action and propose to assert their rights and privileges as independent Members of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then the gentleman construes this resolution as reported by the Committee on Rules as contrary to the action taken by the Democratic caucus?

Mr. LENROOT. There is no question about it, because this resolution is substantially the same, and except in a few words it is exactly the same, as was resolution 405, which on the 7th day of last February the Democratic majority rejected in caucus.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The gentleman has stated that the Democratic caucus on a certain date rejected resolution 405. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the only thing that was rejected by the Democratic caucus which was contained in resolution 405 was the clause that referred to having this matter investigated by a special committee. That was the only thing that was opposed by any member in the Democratic caucus, and that was the only part of the resolution that was voted down.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, in reply to that, I prefer to quote from the debate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD had on that day. I quote first from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. PUJO]. On the 24th day of February he said:

> The responsible majority of this House determined there should be an investigation along orderly lines and in due course of procedure. It was a jurisdictional question.
> The Democratic Party, in its caucus, arrived at the conclusion that the investigation should be made by a committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Is there any claim now that the Banking and Currency Committee has jurisdiction under the rules of this House of the subject matter now contained in this resolution? Will anybody answer?

I desire to refer next to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], who during the course of that debate said:

> Mr. Speaker, in order to still the impatience of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], I beg to read to the House a resolution which I have to-day introduced.

He then read a resolution introduced, which has since been adopted, giving to the Judiciary Committee jurisdiction over a portion of the matter now covered by resolution 405, and then the gentleman continued:

> And I think under this resolution my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I can get busy and do any necessary investigating.

There can be no question, gentleman, that your caucus action was that the various subjects referred to in House resolution 405 should be investigated by the separate committees having jurisdiction of the subject. Is there any question about that?

The contention on this side with reference to this whole question—a contention which is fully vindicated by the resolution now pending before this House—was that while you pretended to give the Committee on Banking and Currency jurisdiction to investigate the so-called Money Trust, in fact you did not enlarge the jurisdiction of that committee one iota, and I stated in the opening of the debate then that this was an attempt upon your part to perpetrate a fraud upon the membership of the House and the country. Your committee now concedes that if the resolution should remain in the form in which it was passed, that would be the effect of it. It has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that the only question before it was whether, there being a reference in the original resolution to House resolution 405, which had not been passed, it was not such a defect as would deprive the committee of jurisdiction over the subjects mentioned in resolution 405. But, Mr. Speaker, they forget that there was no attempt in that resolution to give the committee any jurisdiction over the matters covered in the original resolution 405 other than the committee had already full jurisdiction of, and what we complained about at that time was that they in express words limited the power of the committee with reference to the matter stated in House resolution 405 to matters within its jurisdiction, and the resolution would have meant exactly the same thing if all reference to resolution 405 had been omitted.

So much for that caucus action. I hope that a majority of that side of the aisle, notwithstanding that caucus action, will vote for this resolution to-day, because the resolution is right, and your duty ought to be greater to the public than it is to a secret Democratic caucus. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, with reference to the contention made at the time this original resolution was passed by Members on this side, I want to make one or two references to the debate that occurred at that time. I made the point then that the resolution was not sufficient to give this committee jurisdiction of this subject, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], replying, stated:

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, if the Committee on Banking and Currency upon the adoption of this resolution were to adopt the narrow construction placed upon it by the gentleman from Wisconsin that committee would be damned by the whole country.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that committee now has adopted that narrow construction contended for by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and whether the committee is damned or not by the whole country it is not for me to say. I am glad, however, that there is repentance upon their part, because——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Can I have five minutes more?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. Because of the force of public opinion upon this question that committee is compelled to come back to the House and ask for a resolution that means something that if the committee does its duty will enable it to investigate these great questions as they ought to be investigated. And again the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who I believe is not present to-day, closed the debate upon that occasion, and this is what he stated:

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the burden of complaint sung by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], when measured carefully and boiled down, means insurgent discontent at Democratic harmony. These gentlemen insist that the resolution that this House is asking to pass will not authorize a real investigation. I challenge the assertion. I question the sincerity of gentlemen who dare make such a statement on the floor of this House.

This House can confer upon no committee, regular or special, any broader power than it possesses itself; and if this House has not conferred upon this committee as broad a power as the House of Representatives itself possesses, then I stand confessed as a defeated champion in this cause.

And by the action of the committee in now coming and asking for the very power that we insisted should be inserted in this resolution the gentleman from Georgia does stand confessed, as he said he would, and I shall be interested, Mr. Speaker, in watching the vote upon this question to see now if all your lawyers upon that side of the House are convinced that the resolution did not confer sufficient power upon this committee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LENROOT. And I am interested in knowing whether you are more interested in having a real investigation of this so-called Money Trust or whether you are more interested in wearing the collar of a secret caucus of your party. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TRIBBLE. In the absence of my colleague, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the committee has made any effort to have the real investigation that you asked for? What has the committee done except come back and ask for this resolution? What have they done? Have they undertaken to have any investigation? Have they subpœnaed any witnesses for an investigation?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not, because they have found if they are going to have an actual investigation—and I doubt very much whether it was so intended at the time this resolution was passed—when it was finally determined, because of public opinion, that an investigation must be had, they found they could not make it without coming back to this House and getting power to do it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. RODDENBERY. In that connection, is it not true that in the same RECORD of February 24, from which the gentleman has just quoted, Mr. Chairman PUJO himself said, in response to an inquiry, that if it should be found that the committee did not have ample power to make the investigation the committee certainly would report to the House and ask for such further and additional power as might be found necessary?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; he did make that statement, and if the gentleman desires to leave the matter, that every lawyer upon this side at once saw that the resolution was insufficient to give the necessary power, and it took two months' time for lawyers upon that side to discover it, he is welcome to take that position. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Members of both sides of this House have professed a desire to thoroughly investigate this alleged Money Trust. Resolution 429 directed us to investigate, for the purpose of determining what legislation is needed, the matters touched upon in resolution 405. Even assuming that by referring to resolution 405 it was made as completely a part of 429 as if it were embodied in it, yet the fact that our jurisdiction under resolution 429 is restricted to an investigation for the purpose of determining what legislation is needed makes it apparent at once that we could not investigate the interstate railroads, private banking houses, or State banks as to their connection with a Money Trust, because our committee could not recommend legislation as to those institutions. Under the Kilburn case it would be a fruitless investigation into the private affairs of those institutions, because our committee would have no power to recommend legislation to remedy any wrongs which might exist. The resolution introduced to-day will give us all the power necessary. The subcommittee charged with this investigation, desiring to make a full and complete investigation of this subject, believed it wise to come and ask to be clothed with power that would enable it to carry out the directions of this House.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. What has the committee done?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The committee has studied the law——

Mr. TRIBBLE. You have done nothing except to study the law?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The committee has worked and now has experts at work. But the committee had counsel, the Hon. Edgar H. Farrar, of New Orleans, and Mr. Samuel Untermyer, of New York, analyze this resolution, and after they had considered it they reported to us as their judgment that while we could investigate some matters in this resolution, other matters we could not, and as to other matters there was so much doubt it was necessary that we secure a proper resolution from the House, and we come to you asking for that resolution.

Mr. LOBECK. The fact is, you have done something.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We have done something, though the gentleman from Georgia may not know it. He and some others may think that we should have summoned witnesses without having any definite plan in view; and knowing that our power would be questioned, we preferred to first secure the necessary power and then proceed.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Has the full committee ever considered this question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The full Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Banking and Currency Committee, weeks ago, was divided, 11 members of it being directed to make this Money Trust investigation and the other members being directed to consider the legislative features of the Aldrich-Vreeland banking scheme. The Democratic members of the subcommittee considered this question and ask for this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield one minute additional to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can say this to the Members of this House: If the House was serious in intrusting to the Judiciary and to the Interstate Commerce Committees the investigation of interstate railroads and life insurance companies or other matters, why should it now refuse to give us this power? For my part, as a member of this subcommittee, I do not want to be connected with an investigation the result of which we know now would be a farce, because we would be stopped at every step; and if we are to be hedged in, if we are to be restricted in our power, I can say to the House that I intend to ask the chairman to be relieved from duty upon this committee, because I do not desire to be one of a committee starting out to investigate a Money Trust, by direction of this House, and knowing from the very commencement of the investigation that we can absolutely make of it nothing but a farce. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to use some of his time.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, it has taken the Democratic majority in this House two months to arrive at the conclusion that they had no jurisdiction under the resolution agreed to by the Democratic caucus. Our Democratic brethren were told when that resolution was up two months ago that it was not broad enough for the investigation proposed and such as the country was demanding. Every lawyer on this side of the House knew that resolution gave no jurisdiction outside of merely investigating the national banks of the country and gave no authority to go into any business enterprise except the national banks. Everybody who is a lawyer understood that.

I understand there are about 225 Members on the Democratic side of this House, and I have also understood that there were some fairly good lawyers there. It seems that in the Democratic caucus these lawyers were of the opinion that the resolution was broad enough for the kind of investigation the Democratic caucus wanted to order. Either that or they did not know. They were simply offering the country a mere sham investigation. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] now admits that the investigation under the resolution agreed to by the Democratic caucus would have been a mere sham, that they could not bring anybody before the committee, outside of a national banker, and require him to testify to any matter that was germane to the investigation.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Did you not vote for it on the final passage of the resolution?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; because it was better than nothing at all. It was the only alternative I had. I had been gagged by the previous question. I will say to the gentleman that I would have voted for a better resolution.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman joined with the Committee on Rules in their report. He did not make any minority report on it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; I did not make any minority report.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I will ask the gentleman this question: While he did vote for the resolution, did he not call the attention of the House, and particularly the attention of that side of the House, to the fact that they could not reach anything except the national banks?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; exactly.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to this prominent fact in regard to this investigation: It remained for a couple of lawyers to give advice to the 225 Democratic Members of the House that they had no jurisdiction under the resolution that had heretofore been agreed to. [Applause on the Republican side.] And upon the advice of counsel I assume that the caucus was reconvened and the action upon the old resolution rescinded and the committee authorized to go to the Committee on Rules for such a resolution as able lawyers had told them would authorize the kind of investigation that they had said they were in favor of. I am not in the secrets of the Democratic Party and I do not know whether there was such a caucus or not. If there was not such action by the Democratic caucus, then the advice of their lawyers supersedes the action of the Democratic caucus.

But it is expensive to the country. It would be far cheaper for the country to hire a couple of good lawyers and dispose entirely of the Democratic Party and its caucus.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which is the better plan, in the gentleman's opinion—this Democratic caucus to take the advice of two good lawyers or to adopt the policy of the last Republican administration, to take the advice of Mr. Perkins, who did not want to be investigated? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am now discussing this resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be the safest thing for the gentleman to discuss. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. However that may be, I shall confine myself to a discussion of this resolution and proceed to say that you were given advice when the resolution was before the House some weeks ago by lawyers from this side, who advised you fully that you were proposing to pass a resolution that did not give any authority whatever.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman speaks of lawyers on that side?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Are there any lawyers on that side? [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; and lawyers that gave advice to the Democratic side of this House when the resolution was up on the 24th day of February, exactly on all fours with that advice which has been given by the two lawyers that have been hired by the committee, and we gave it freely. It cost the country nothing except the salary of the lawyers on this side of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have always found out that the free advice of lawyers is not worth anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. You had the same advice when you hired these two lawyers as we gave you.

What has become of the investigation that is to be made by your Committee on the Judiciary? I am anxious to know what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], who is somewhat assertive of his rights, is going to do with the authority that the House gave him only a few days ago to make an investigation. In all probability the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary will convene his committee and they will employ counsel to advise them what their rights are in the premises, and if it is decided that they have jurisdiction over all matters that involve trust questions, they will probably insist upon asserting those rights.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce also has a resolution which he is ready to offer.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not see the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] present, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary; but, having the honor to be the ranking member, the second member of that committee, I will state that the Committee on the Judiciary, so far as I know, will proceed to investigate the trust problems, as they were instructed to do by this House, and I think I can state for the chairman that he is not opposed to this resolution, because he knows it does not conflict with his committee's jurisdiction. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. But this resolution gives jurisdiction over the trusts. Are we to have as many investigations as there are committees of this House?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In so far as it relates to the Money Trust.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I assume, then, that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, will insist on the right of his committee to investigate all questions that involve our interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that I am ready to report out a resolution giving his committee the authority that the caucus instructed. Will the gentleman do the same?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I shall vote for all of these resolutions, as I have done heretofore.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he was on the other side of the question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no. I am simply making some inquiry of the Democratic side of this House as to why they had to come back. I used to know a man who always had to come back and grease his wagon after he started to go to town. It would have been far better for the country for gentlemen on the other side of the House to have taken the advice they had two months ago, without hiring lawyers to advise them as to their rights in these matters, and then get the same advice they had refused to take.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania use some more of his time?

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is an extraordinary proceeding. Some weeks ago we were advised that the Democratic Party in solemn caucus assembled had decided upon a certain line of conduct in regard to the investigation now under consideration. Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, without any further caucus action, come here and offer a resolution and ask the House to pass it, which resolution the Democratic caucus on the occasion referred to solemnly turned down. That would be extraordinary enough; but more extraordinary still, the gentlemen on the other side try to give the impression that this resolution is here at the request of the Committee on Banking and Currency, or at least of the subcommittee having charge of this investigation. As a member of that committee and of that subcommittee, I wish to say that this matter has never been brought either before the committee or the subcommittee for its action.

Mr. PUJO. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. HAYES. If I can get a little time.

Mr. PUJO. Only a moment. In my opening statement I said this resolution had been introduced by me at the request of a majority of the majority members of the subcommittee.

Mr. HAYES. I think the gentleman so stated, and I simply want it distinctly understood that the minority members of that subcommittee have never been consulted in regard to this matter, that the resolution has never been brought before that committee, and I think I do not violate any of the rules of this House if I state things that have not transpired before that committee. During these weeks that have gone by very few, if any, meetings of the subcommittee have been held—I recall none—at which the minority members of that committee have had an opportunity to be present. We have not heard the discussion of this matter. We are only advised by such proceedings as this and by the public press what the action of the committee is proposed to be.

A special accountant was employed by the subcommittee at its only meeting that I recall. The minority members of the subcommittee have not been present when any discussions were had or when any action was had to decide what the scope of this investigation should be or the methods under which it should be conducted. Nothing of the kind. The matter has been conducted by the majority of the Banking and Currency Committee and by the majority of the subcommittee, and treated as a purely political matter at meetings at which they evidently did not desire to have the Republican members present.

Mr. GLASS. If I may interrupt the gentleman, is that at all unusual?

Mr. HAYES. I will say to the gentleman that I have served on the Banking and Currency Committee for seven years, and I recall but one such case where the committee did not have a full meeting of the committee. I recall no case where the majority of that committee have discussed any important matter except in the presence of the full committee.

Mr. GLASS. Perhaps I can recall to the gentleman's mind a very distinct occasion when that was done. When the Vreeland-Aldrich bill was considered it was considered by the majority members of that committee without the presence of a single minority member, and when it went over to the Senate it was there considered by the Republican members of the Senate Finance Committee. Senator Daniel, of Virginia, protested on the floor of the Senate against that sort of a proceeding, and Senator Aldrich answered him that it was not at all unusual.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I will say, in reply to the gentleman, that that bill was discussed before the full committee, not at one meeting or two, but I think for weeks, and the gentleman, if he chose, and every member of the minority could have been present, for they received notice of the meetings, and it was their undisputed right to attend. In the case under consideration weeks have passed by without the minority members receiving any notice of meetings, to say nothing of having an opportunity to participate in the deliberations of the committee, although we conjecture from what we see and hear that the policy to be pursued and the scope and manner of the investigation have been fully decided upon by the majority members of the committee, and a large clerical force is even now engaged in the actual investigation under the direction of the majority members, but what this force is engaged upon the minority members are not advised.

In the action of the Banking and Currency Committee while I have been a member of it the only occasion where there was any meeting separate from the minority by the majority members of the committee was when the Fowler currency bill was finally reported out.

Mr. GLASS. And that was the crucial time, but the gentleman is mistaken as to that statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. HAYES. Since I have been a member of the Banking and Currency Committee that committee has never been run as a political machine. I want this House to understand, and I think it is entitled to understand, and I want the country to understand, that it is apparently the intention of the majority of this House to run this subcommittee as a political machine. I think the minority members are entitled to some rights, and I protest in the name of the minority against the methods adopted by the majority. In an important matter of this kind it should not be brought before the House until the members of the minority have had an opportunity to hear the discussion, participate in it, and express their opinion about it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is the gentleman in favor of the resolution?

Mr. HAYES. I intend to vote for the resolution, but that does not make any difference with the method of proceeding. I think that a matter of this kind should be conducted wholly and entirely as a nonpartisan matter. It is a matter too large to be made a political question, and this investigation should be conducted as the Banking and Currency Committee have always considered great questions, in a nonpartisan manner, giving full rights to the minority members of the committee, as the rules of the House require. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, having temporary control of the time, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY].

Mr. NEELEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what force public opinion has had upon gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, but speaking for myself public opinion has had nothing to do with this resolution. I am for it because I have always been for it—for a full, fair, unprejudiced, unbiased investigation of the so-called Money Trust, and to obtain and secure the actual facts in relation to that matter, without regard to whom it may injure or whom it may benefit; not as a Democratic Party measure, but as a measure for the people of this country as a whole.

It has not taken two months for me to determine that this committee did not have jurisdiction of what I think should be investigated, and what I think the Democratic caucus intended should be investigated. Immediately upon my selection as a member of the subcommittee I began to study this resolution, and I very soon came to the conclusion that it lacked the teeth that it ought to have. I now believe that it has the teeth in it necessary to find out the relations of the Steel Trust to the Money Trust; that it has the teeth in it necessary to find out the relation of the Harvester Trust to the Money Trust; that it has the teeth in it necessary to find out all the facts that the people want to know about matters that are of vital importance to the country at this time.

I notice that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has been a Member of this Congress for four terms, and that at no time, so far as my knowledge goes, has he ever offered a resolution of this kind to investigate the Money Trust, or any trust for that matter, and that the gentlemen on the other side are very much agitated about the action of the Democratic caucus.

The Democratic caucus has nothing to do with this measure, and the man who votes against this resolution is opposed to any investigation. The man who hides behind the cloak of committee jurisdiction or caucus action is opposed to any investigation of the so-called Money Trust. [Applause.] It is a clean-cut issue. You have only one choice to make; you are either with us or you are against us. House resolution 409 provided that the committee should have jurisdiction to inquire into the things named in resolution 405 within the jurisdiction of said committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELEY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman if, when the other resolution was up, when we tried to put some teeth into it, if he did not vote against any proposition that would put teeth into it?

Mr. NEELEY. I did not hear that the gentleman offered to put any teeth in it. If I voted for the resolution, it was because I wanted an investigation; and I am here now to get the teeth, because I think the old resolution insufficient.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the gentleman vote for the previous question on that occasion? We tried to defeat the previous question so it could be amended and teeth put into it, but in obedience to your secret caucus you defeated us in that attempt.

Mr. NEELEY. I would like to ask the gentleman now if he is in favor of putting teeth into it?

Mr. NORRIS. I am in favor of putting teeth into it now, and I was then. The gentleman is now in favor of putting teeth into it, but he was not then. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. NEELEY. It was stated at the time that if the resolution did not have the power necessary, we would come back and get more power; and we are back, and we have no apology to make for coming back. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I only want to address myself to those Democrats who are afraid to order this investigation for fear they will get into trouble. When we first had this investigation up before this House there were some Democrats who said that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] undertook to get this investigation made in a Republican Congress and that he was turned down, and that now if we ordered this investigation here so soon after we came into power we would all get into trouble.

Mr. Speaker, with millionaires on the one hand and mendicants on the other, with palaces on one side and hovels on the other, with swollen fortunes upon one hand and abject poverty upon the other, and with individuals coming into the possession of such vast amounts of wealth in a single decade that they can not give it away in a lifetime through the endowment of libraries; with the cost of living raised so high to the workingman that he can no longer, with his own hands, with his own labor, support a wife and children, but must drive his babies out of the cradle into the factories, into the sweatshops, to earn their own living, instead of Democrats running from trouble, all good Democrats ought to be looking for trouble. [Laughter and applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, it is a source of constant amusement to me to listen to Members on the other side who in one breath assail and condemn the Democratic caucus because it is a secret meeting and at the same time proceed to tell, with a cocksureness born of the rankest partisan prejudice, everything that happened in that Democratic caucus. Because that caucus is secret, however, it is perfectly natural that what these gentlemen say happens there rarely does happen; and so it is in relation to this proposition of the investigation of this Money Trust.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution now introduced is not only in line with the Democratic caucus upon this question, but is an absolute vindication and justification of the action of those Democrats in that caucus who supported what was known as the Underwood substitute for the original Henry resolution.

The fact is that before that caucus met the country in some sections had received the impression, carefully fed to it from Republican sources, that the Democratic Party did not want an investigation of the Money Trust and proposed to side-step it by referring it to a regular committee of the House. They argued that nothing but a special committee would mean a real investigation of the Money Trust, so that when we got into the Democratic caucus we were met by the situation that we would discredit a regular committee of the House if we gave this resolution to a special committee, and in order to show the country that all the Democrats of this House were earnestly seeking to do their duty, we referred to the regular Committee on Banking and Currency every question which was covered by the Henry resolution, which came within the jurisdiction of that committee, and nine-tenths of the members of the caucus sitting in their seats that night, many of them so declaring upon the floor, believed, and I was one of them, that there is a Money Trust and that it ought to be investigated. We believed also, however, it should not be investigated in a way which would discredit the fairness of the investigation or appeal to the desires of such sensational papers of the country as wished to make political capital out of this investigation of business conditions, but that it should be conducted in an orderly and proper manner through a regular committee of the House.

It was on that account, and on that account solely, that it was referred to this Committee on Banking and Currency, the members of that committee making the statement then that if they could not carry out the wishes of nine-tenths of the caucus in favor of a real investigation as covered by the Henry resolution, under the Underwood substitute, they would come back to the House and ask for sufficient power to make that investigation of every question covered by that resolution, and they are here now making good, justifying the placing of the power in that committee, and showing that a regular committee of the House intended then and intends now to make as real and absolute an investigation of this momentous question as any special committee could make. Therefore, when we vote for this resolution, we vote to sustain, if not the letter of the caucus action, certainly the true spirit and intent of the Democratic caucus. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], as I understood him, stated that he had doubt as to whether this committee, at the time it was invested with power to make this investigation, really wanted or intended to make the investigation.

Mr. LENROOT. I referred to the Democratic majority.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The Democratic majority, then—that the Democratic membership of this House did not intend or desire to make the investigation.

I have said on this floor before, and I repeat now, that I have never heard a single Member on this side of the House express a wish or desire that the investigation should not be made.

Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no foundation for the charge made by the gentleman. I can not understand why he makes it now or why he should have any such doubt in his mind, unless it be for the reason that he has been so long a member of a party which has for years bowed down at the shrine of wealth, which has so long been willing to be dictated to by men of high standing and great wealth, which has for its leaders men who have been controlled by special interests; unless it be, I say, that he has seen so much of this kind of business within the ranks of his own party that he has become suspicious of every man, and that he supposes that the Democrats will be actuated and controlled by the same motives and interests that have dominated and controlled many of the leaders of his own party.

There is criticism that we are going back on the action of the Democratic caucus. This is not the fact. I assert positively that this is exactly in line with the plan mapped out by the caucus. The fight there was over the single proposition as to whether the investigation should be made by a special or a standing committee, and it was voted that it should be made by standing committees, and the subject matter now proposed to be investigated is exactly the same that the caucus directed to be investigated.

Mr. Speaker, Republican Members take great delight in criticizing the Democrats for holding caucuses, and try to make political capital out of it. Every party has its caucus. It is referred to as a "secret caucus." If it is supposed to be secret, it is not really so, because every act is soon heralded abroad. In fact, it is a rule of the caucus that the records shall be open to the public, and anyone has a right to see the record and to know just how each Member votes on each roll call.

So far as I am concerned, I have no particular objection to changing the rules of the caucus so as to let everyone attend who desires to do so, because, as I have said, everything that is done is soon known anyway. In fact, when the question was voted upon as to whether the caucus should be "secret" or "open," I voted for the open caucus.

It is said that this committee has not done anything up to this time. The gentlemen who make this statement do not know anything about the matter. The committee has been hard at work ever since the matter was placed in their hands. I doubt if any Member of this House has done any more work than has the Democratic members of this subcommittee. We are engaged in gathering information and data that is necessary to be had before witnesses are called and hearings begun.

No good lawyer would go into the trial of a case until he had had an opportunity to thoroughly prepare his case. He would not call a witness until he knew to what facts the witness would testify. To do so would write him down as either a fool or an inexperienced lawyer.

It is charged that there is a monopolistic control of credits; that the great interests are crushing the people of the country. This is a matter of such vast importance that it must be carefully gone into by the committee before the taking of testimony begins. The committee is anxious to make a success of the investigation, and I believe will do so. It will take time to uproot and overturn the great evils that have so firmly fixed themselves upon the country. Those engaged in these iniquities will not volunteer the information, and we must dig up all that we can.

The committee expects to take ample time to prepare the case. I feel sure that there are many persons who would like to see the investigation begun before thorough preparation is made, because they know that it would mean a complete failure, an inglorious fiasco, which is exactly what they want, for they are at heart opposed to any investigation.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen upon the other side have complained of the manner in which a Democratic House proposes to conduct the proposed investigation. They have asserted that the investigation was neither sincere nor would it be thorough. They now seem very anxious that an investigation be conducted that will go to the bottom and disclose whatever evils exist. Whatever evils do exist, Mr. Speaker, originated and developed during the long period of complete Republican control of this Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No one ever suggested until the Democrats came into power in the House that there should be an investigation to determine whether these evils, the result of vicious legislation enacted by the Republican Party, could be corrected or what legislation would eliminate the abuses resulting therefrom. Even those gentlemen known as the progressives or insurgents in the Republican Party were suspiciously silent, and their efforts were completely restrained during the time their own party was in power. If there ever has been any doubt as to the necessity of an investigation by a Democratic House it has been made clear by the reports that appear in to-day's press that such an investigation is imperative. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The last administration stopped and stifled an investigation which was designed to bring to the bar of justice a great, prominent, and influential element in the commercial life of the country, which was then violating the Sherman antitrust law; and the trust which was to have been proceeded against is now being dissolved through an arrangement with the Department of Justice in order to avoid a prosecution, which was to have been initiated. There was in the files of the department correspondence from public officials with a Republican President of the United States, in which it appears that the administration was influenced to stop an investigation, because it might arouse the hostility of great financial groups generally designated as the Morgan interests, and lest perchance somebody, through overzeal, might furnish the information to the public, the correspondence was marked "confidential."

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not now—and it would never have been disclosed to the public if the exigency of a desperate political campaign did not make it desirable for one of the candidates to give it to the public. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, if there be any more information hidden in the archives or records of the Government, we desire to have it laid bare, not in the interest or to the disadvantage of any Republican candidate for the nomination for the Presidency, but for the welfare of the people, in order that they may know the great, dominant power of the financial interests over the administration of public affairs while the Republican Party was in complete control of the Government. It is a matter of more importance now than anything that confronts Congress. Is there to be continued an administration which will keep from the public important public documents which demonstrate that the financial interests of the country have a controlling grip upon a Republican administration, and that permits such information to be disclosed only when it may help or hurt Republican candidates, or is such information to be given to the country and to the people's representatives in order to enable them to discharge honestly the responsibilities placed upon them? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 14 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, under the implied threat of the gentleman from Texas, we were compelled to agree to a limitation of debate of 45 minutes to a side, and even of that all of the time consumed except 14 minutes has been consumed by gentlemen who favor the resolution. I rise to oppose the resolution. Mr. Speaker, on February 3 the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] introduced a resolution known as House resolution 405, which was considered by the Democratic caucus, as we are advised, and a decision reached not to pass the resolution, but that the authority conferred in that resolution upon a special committee should be exercised by the regular committees of the House. On February 9 the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] introduced a resolution conferring upon the Committee on Banking and Currency power to make the investigation as far as its jurisdiction extended.

On February 24 the Committee on Rules reported to the House resolution 429, which was passed, giving to the Committee on Banking and Currency power to make investigation of every matter under its jurisdiction which was contained in House resolution 405, originally introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY]. The other day the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] introduced House resolution 502, to extend the powers of the Committee on Banking and Currency, almost in the language of the resolution now pending, namely, No. 504. These two resolutions both contain all the provisions which were in House resolution 405—the original one—except that the resolution now pending includes additional matter besides what was originally included in House resolution 405. And we are led to understand that the Democratic side of the House is afraid of its Committee on the Judiciary, is afraid of its Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, afraid to let them continue alone the investigation of the matters pertaining to their jurisdiction, and now propose to give to the Committee on Banking and Currency the entire jurisdiction over every matter originally included in the Henry resolution.

Figuratively speaking, I take my hat off to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], who introduced the original resolution. He had the nerve to be in favor of it. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the honored Speaker of this House, went into a Democratic caucus and defeated a favorable report or action upon the Henry resolution. But these two gentlemen are candidates for nomination for President. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] has run them to cover. He has his way now, representing another candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Wilson, of New Jersey; and the distinguished candidates for the Presidency from Alabama and Missouri are afraid to stand where they stood at the time of the Democratic caucus and have laid down and let the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] walk over their prostrate bodies. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, the resolution which was originally passed by the House, No. 429, in my opinion gave to the Committee on Banking and Currency all the jurisdiction which Congress could confer on the subject of banking and currency. An investigation under that resolution was an investigation exercising the constitutional powers of the House. The pending resolution has matters in it which every lawyer ought to know the Constitution would not permit the House to investigate. What authority have we to investigate legislation or the influences affecting legislation in the different States of the Union? What authority have we to investigate why Alabama or Texas passes certain laws? What authority have we to investigate purely State corporations, as is proposed by this resolution?

Mr. Speaker, we are advised now that the Committee on Banking and Currency has engaged as its counsel Mr. Untermyer, of New York; that he has prepared this resolution now presented before us; and I am informed that he prepared the original Henry resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield for a very short statement.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I want to correct the gentleman. Mr. Untermyer did not prepare the resolution that I introduced. I prepared it myself, and he has stated he never saw it to read it, and Mr. Farrar had as much to do with this as Mr. Untermyer.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I do not know who prepared it. Whoever prepared it was not a lawyer; that I know. The resolution originally undertook to provide that this House could grant immunity to witnesses testifying before it, when the veriest tyro in the law knows that the House for itself has no such authority. I only judged that Mr. Untermyer prepared it, because I did not believe my gallant captain from Texas, now the mighty character in Democratic politics, thought the House could change the law about immunity to witnesses. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, my opposition to this resolution is not an opposition to an investigation. I have no objection to all the committees you may appoint which attempt to make honest investigations. We passed resolution No. 429 and let the Committee on Banking and Currency proceed with this resolution a little more than two months ago—two months in a session of Congress. What has that committee done during the two months?

Mr. PUJO. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. I will not.

Mr. PUJO. I can tell you.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can tell it in his own time. I did not limit the time. I wanted more, but the gentlemen on that side of the House insisted on fixing the time, and now want to take up the time we have a right to occupy on this side of the House.

I will tell you what is behind the resolution. Mr. Untermyer, of New York—not my distinguished friend from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO], because he will have but little to do with this, but the counsel he has employed—is proposing to milk the money power and the corporations that he is seeking to investigate.

This is one of these "come-and-see-me" resolutions. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] We have an important political campaign ahead of us. There is need for money, for funds. They say to a corporation—because this gives power to examine into every proceeding of every corporation in the land—they say to a corporation, "Come and show up everything you have ever done, or else put up the stuff." [Laughter on the Republican side.] They say, "If you dare make a movement in favor of our political opponents we drag you up before the bar of our committee."

That is what the resolution is for—not for an honest investigation of banking and currency, but an effort to prostitute the power of the Government for use, first, to collect funds, and second, to influence action in a political campaign.

No grosser abuse of the power of Congress or of the House was ever undertaken, and no such gross abuse was ever exercised before in the history of the Government as this purpose of our Democratic majority, acting as a partisan proposition, refusing in this manner even to consult the minority on the Committee on Banking and Currency, but passing a sweeping dragnet resolution under the influence of which their counsel can frighten and hold up every corporation in the country.

I know that is a welcome statement to the other side of the House. They think that means they will win at the election. They think they have the poor people with them, and now they will take the rich people with them out of fear. But, Mr. Speaker, the good sense of this country, the fairness and honesty and patriotism of the people of our country, will not permit to go unrebuked this foul and dastardly attempt to coerce everybody in the country to the support of the candidate of the gentleman from Texas. We will show you at the polls that the people still retain common sense and have no use for your methods or your contemptible attempts to do what you are trying to do now—rob and hold up every corporation that does not kneel at your feet. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does me great honor, and I thank him for what he has said. I do not know of anyone better qualified to testify as to the process of milking the financial powers than the minority leader of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman says that this resolution provides for milking the money power of the United States. And yet here is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when we formerly voted, wherein the gentleman from Illinois voted in favor of the resolution, and——

Mr. MANN. Not this resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, no; not this, but the first one. Then you would vote for a weak one and not for a strong one?

Mr. MANN. I voted for one that gave the power of an investigation to the Committee on Banking and Currency and not the power to milk the corporations.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois was willing to vote for a weak resolution, but not for a strong one.

Mr. Speaker, this is a sad day for the gentleman from Illinois, and he speaks lugubriously, because he knows we intend to investigate the money monopoly and that he must come out in the open on this question and he and his party friends must stand up and be investigated. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman refers to the Speaker of this House [Mr. CLARK] and to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Let me say in this presence to-day that in my judgment the Speaker of the House and Mr. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, are not opposed to this resolution. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman can not put them in that attitude. They would not suppress it. They would not suppress "My dear Harriman" letters nor the letters that were written by Perkins, or about Perkins, or those records that are lurking in a bureau of this Government. They are ready for this investigation, and the gentleman from Illinois ought to be ready. If he is not, we serve notice on him that when next November comes there will be more seats made vacant on that side of the House. If they do not meet the demands of the American people and stand for purity and righteousness in American politics they must pay the penalty. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is not present to-day, and that the Speaker of the House is absent. Why not take the American people into our confidence and state the real facts about it?

The Speaker came here this morning, and had to return to his home because of his illness; and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, is now in Alabama attending the marriage ceremony of his son. [Applause.] He is not running from this question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me say another thing to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. He need not disturb himself about my candidate for President. We have an abundance of candidates, and whether he be one of the four, whether he be Gov. Wilson or any other good Democrat——

MANY MEMBERS. CLARK! CLARK!

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Whoever he is, we intend to elect him President in November. Why, Mr. Speaker, when half the members of the Republican Party come to our candidate and say they would rather see a Democratic President than to see Taft or Roosevelt, how in the name of God can we fail? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. But do not let them call up the cows.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, yes. If we let them call up the cows and go on a milking expedition, then we may have some trouble in defeating them; but the truth of the business is we have passed a campaign publicity bill, and the American people are put upon notice, and money will not go so far this year. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, this resolution is well drawn It was not drawn by Mr. Untermyer any more than it was drawn by Judge Farrar, and the gentleman need not try to hide behind that proposition. What hurts him is that he knows that under the guidance of Mr. Untermyer and Edgar H. Farrar, the former president of the American Bar Association, with the power that we now give to this committee, they will uncover those things that have been hidden for years, and we will know what constitutes the Money Trust. That is what disturbs the gentleman, and no assault that he may make on eminent counsel can amount to anything. He says Mr. Untermyer is the power behind this resolution. It is not the power "behind" the resolution that disturbs gentlemen on that side, but it is what is "in front of the resolution." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

So, Mr. Speaker, I contend that the resolution ought to be adopted, preamble and all. The preamble is a part of the resolution, as was decided in the Kilbourn case, and reference is made to it in the resolving part. It is well drawn It meets the emergency, and I invoke a vote of this House to-day to adopt it. And let us proceed to the most important investigation occurring since the close of the Civil War. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I move the previous question on the amendment and the resolution to its final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 149, noes 62.

Accordingly the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The amendment is to strike out, on page 10, beginning at line 10, down to and including the word "investigation" in line 21.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, strike out all from line 10 to line 20, inclusive, and all of line 21 to and including the word "investigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 241, nays 15, answered "present" 10, not voting 125, as follows:

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LANGLEY, and he answered "Present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

JUDGE ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 511 (H. Rept. 601).

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House of Representatives a copy of any charges filed against Robert W. Archbald, associate judge of the United States Commerce Court, together with the report of any special attorney or agent appointed by the Department of Justice to investigate such charges, and a copy of any and all affidavits, photographs, and evidence filed in the Department of Justice in relation to said charges, together with a statement of the action of the Department of Justice, if any, taken upon said charges and report.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Clerk to read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House resolution 511, reports the same back with a recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Has the committee made any examination or investigation at all to see whether there are any charges of a serious nature which have been made against Judge Archbald?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the committee made no investigation further than to hear the statement made before the committee by the author of the resolution, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. MANN. Did he make a statement to the committee that there were serious charges that had been made?

Mr. CLAYTON. He did so state that there were charges against this judge, but he did not undertake to say whether those charges were pending before the Department of Justice or not.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF ALIENS INTO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill H. R. 22527, to further restrict the admission of aliens into the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to file minority views (H. Rept. 559, pt. 2) on the bill indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD certain remarks made by Representative EDWARD W. TOWNSEND, of New Jersey, printed in the Newark Evening News of Wednesday, April 24, 1912, on the subject of the relations between the United States and the Republic of Mexico.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to print certain remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The remarks referred to are as follows:

"A certain section of the press has within the past few days shown evidence of an effort to create public opinion in favor of intervention by our country in the domestic affairs of Mexico. Appeals are being made which are poddy with patriotism and grave with business considerations, but the real purpose of these appeals is thinly disguised, and must be generally understood.

"The purpose, in fact, is to create a public demand for a thing not desired by the public, but urgently desired by certain people for a political purpose. The high esteem in which I hold President Taft, personally, does not permit me to believe that anyone would dare to go to him and urge the real purpose in asking intervention, but reckless political plungers who feel urgent need of a strong political weapon to aid them in the current presidential campaign will ply him—undoubtedly are now plying him—with arguments based on false appeals to patriotism and to business considerations.

"The danger is that the President's native love of peace and instinctive distaste for the blood price, the material waste, and all the hideous horrors of war will be overcome by the misrepresentations of desperate politicians.

"Considering first merely the material aspect involved in this question, the business men and the laboring men of the United States should give serious thought to the amazing loss this country would suffer in its Pan American commerce the moment a United States Army of invasion crossed the Rio Grande River. Not alone the loss of our trade with Mexico, but with every State lying between the Rio Grande and Cape Horn, the Latin-American countries to the south of us.

TRADE WITH MEXICO.

"Taking Mexico alone, however, the value of our exports to that country in 1909–10 was $56,439,181, an increase of more than $11,000,000 over the preceding year and an excess of more than $45,000,000 over the country having the next highest values of exports into Mexico. From the beginning of any movement toward intervention the United States would lose the total of that export trade into Mexico, and our principal competitors—Great Britain, Germany, France, and Spain—would divide the trade among them.

"But these trade figures, important as they are, are overwhelmed when we consider the total of our trade with the 21 American Republics between the Rio Grande and Cape Horn. In 1909 the United States bought from and sold to Latin America products valued at nearly $600,000,000. How this splendid commerce has grown in the comparatively few years since we have gained the confidence of those people and since our merchants have exercised intelligent energy in securing a portion of that trade for themselves, is shown by these figures. A decade ago that total trade was of an annual value of $236,000,000—that is, we increased in 10 years our annual trade with these Latin-American Republics $364,000,000.

"Not to quote statistics tiresomely, let me give a few details in an analysis of this tremendous trade movement which has grown and is growing so rapidly, but which would be well-nigh destroyed if the Latin-American countries saw United States troops invading the territory of one of their number. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, our total Pan American commerce amounted to the amazing value of $640,459,752. We imported from those countries products of the value of $369,796,530 and exported $270,663,222.

"It must be remembered that the total of our imports is made up very largely of products we do not produce ourselves and for which we necessarily depend upon those countries, and the Latin-American countries can buy from Great Britain and Europe nearly all the articles that they import from us. How rich these Pan American countries are, what their trade resources may become, even beyond their present extent, is suggested by the fact that their foreign commerce to-day amounts to $30 per capita, while that of China and Japan together amounts to but $3 per capita. But even those averages do not express the potential commercial possibilities of one of our Pan American customers. Argentina's per capita of foreign commerce, on a basis of 7,000,000 inhabitants, is an average of $100, a rate not surpassed by any other large country.

THE PENSION COST.

"Turning from the trade cost of war with Mexico, it is worth while considering the pension-bill cost which would be incurred. Our war with Spain ended 14 years ago, but already we are paying nearly $4,000,000 annually on account of 28,490 Spanish War pensions. What the growth of this payment will be is suggested by the fact that on June 30, 1911, there were 8,386 Spanish War claims pending and that in the 1911 fiscal year there were 3,033 new Spanish War claims filed. Within a few years our pension bill for the Spanish War will exceed $10,000,000 annually, and will grow for the next 30 years.

"But no general commanding an army of invasion would give the order to cross the Rio Grande into Mexico without an army under him numbering ten times at least as many United States soldiers as ever set foot on Cuban or Philippine soil during our war with Spain.

"In Cuba our Army of invasion met a disorganized mob of underpaid and underfed Spaniards fighting not for their own country, but for a subject country; in Mexico our Army of invasion would meet well-armed troops fighting on their own soil for their own homes and vastly more numerous than those we had to overcome in Cuba or in the Philippines. There would be all the hideous horror of a long-drawn-out war, with thousands upon thousands of stricken American homes—homes of widows and fatherless children. For what? That some reckless and heartless politicians may gain a point in a political campaign.

"I frankly appeal to the citizens of Essex County, whom I represent in part in Congress, for support in the efforts which I shall make as a Member of Congress and a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, to help avert this dreadful blood cost and material waste. It would help me if I could hear from every minister, priest, and rabbi who shudders at the thought of thousands of mourning women and children; I should like to hear from manufacturers who look forward to the prosperity growing out of increasing foreign commerce; from every wage earner who loves peace and prosperity and its opportunities for uninterrupted employment."

THE NEW INDUSTRIAL DAY.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address of the Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD before the Adcraft Club, of Detroit, Mich., on March 28, 1912, on the New Industrial Day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that there may be inserted in the RECORD certain remarks of Representative REDFIELD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think our friend from New York [Mr. REDFIELD] really ought to have a book printed to cover his speeches, because we have had so many of them inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would be perfectly willing. They are all excellent.

Mr. MANN. They are all very good, but they ought to be put in the form of a book.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The remarks referred to are as follows:

THE NEW INDUSTRIAL DAY.

ADDRESS OF THE HON. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD BEFORE THE ADCRAFT CLUB, OF DETROIT, MARCH 28, 1912.

"It is hard to realize here in Detroit, with your ample spaces and broad areas, that there are dark industrial places, that men and women, aye, and children, are confined in foul spots and driven through long hours and at pitiful pay for the means not so much of living as of existence. When I was thinking of the theme on which it would be my privilege to speak to you, there came to me the recollection of the many neat small houses that are so marked a feature of your city, and of the great, airy, well-lighted shops that here prosper, and it seemed as if here, more than in almost any other place, the dawn of a new industrial day had come. So you and your city are responsible for my choice of a subject.

"It needs to be said at the very beginning that it is not my thought to advocate here any sudden or radical change in method or action. I believe in evolution, slow, steady, patient, progressive, not in revolution which turns things quickly upside down. This is a case, gentlemen, for the application of the Scripture phrase: 'Come, let us reason together.' More than anything else I dread in what should be a sober, serious weighing of facts and searching for truth, the entrance of impatience or of prejudice, those twin enemies of calm judgment.

"It would be pleasant to linger here in this bright room, with this good company, and talk together of themes of common interest; but our engagements lie elsewhere, and I shall have to ask you, at least in thought, to leave these pleasant surroundings and to enter in spirit one of our great factories and spend perhaps an hour there. Let us hope that during that time we shall be unlike those of old of whom it was said that they saw but did not perceive; for our purpose in going into the works will be to look closely into what may be seen there and to think as carefully as we can about what we shall see. Before we go, however, let me read you these few words:

"The old mills for all practical running purposes are as good as the new. There are certain wearing parts in a machine, which, if renewed from time to time, keep the machine as good as new. This will apply to all machinery. Where the mill has a good machine shop and where the standard of mechanical conditions is high, whenever a machine is not 'right' it will be stopped and made 'right.' If this is maintained, age is not serious."

"This is not taken from an inscription in old Egypt, nor even from the records of the Middle Ages. It is, for all its ancient flavor, an extract from page 1044 of the report of the Tariff Board on wool, and is a statement made in all innocence and ignorance to that board by a manufacturer who thinks he is running a modern enterprise. Beside it let us put the phrase current in the shop with which I was for many years familiar, original with one of our foremen—'Six months ago is ancient history.' Between the spirit which does not regard a well-preserved old age in machinery as serious and that which regards as ancient all that is a half year past lies a chasm in thought and the widest possible difference in management. It is perhaps not too much to say that these opposing ideals may fairly represent mechanical decrepitude on one side and efficiency on the other. One is not surprised to find that the same volume of the Tariff Board report shows a large percentage of the machinery in our worsted and woolen mills to have been in use over 25 years. What this means in your thought and mine will be clear to others when you and I say to one another that the great industries with which we are in one way or another connected have made their entire development since the time these machines were put in use in our woolen mills. I do not wish to be grossly inferential, but you will permit me to wonder whether the existence of a 90 per cent duty has not some trifling connection with the amazing suggestion that as regards machinery 'age is not serious.'

"But we have kept out of the shop too long. As we enter it we see that the building was designed for its use, and the primary essentials of space and light and air have been given thought. In the older day, which is closing, the workmen were furnished large drafts of carbon dioxide to consume with the other materials placed at their disposal, and there was not always appreciation of the fact that light had a relation to the human eye, but in our present factory these things are recognized. The building also has been so designed that the flow of work through it is continuous, for industrially we have learned the force of the old Roman maxim, 'Not a step backward.' The machines are grouped each according to its kind, like the animals in Noah's ark. There used to be a cheerful distribution of these things, as if a lathe were not comfortable unless a shaper and miller were side by side with it, or a planer were carefully married to a drill press. But we have divorced them now and we group 3 or 4 or 10 of a kind, each in its order for the proper routing of the work as it passes through the shop. We go even into the details of these groups and so relate the machines, one to another, at different angles that they may be properly fed without trespassing on space, and we put racks beneath them so that an abundance of material may be piled at hand to avoid time and steps when new stock is needed for the automatic machinery. All through the whole machine equipment shows the evidence of study, how each unit shall not only be fitted to its task and be given the best conditions in which to perform that task, but each shall be so related to its fellow unit that the task of the fellow shall not be hindered but helped.

"And since these buildings and machines are meant for production and are all of them useless waste unless they produce, and are none of them sources of profit unless they produce efficiently, you look into certain other details that bear upon these factors. You have discovered, for example, that a belt running on the old tight-and-loose pulley is always under tension, and even when running on the loose pulley is wearing itself away and shortening its life, and you have taken up a form of countershaft, in which the loose pulley is slightly smaller than the tight pulley, so that the belt runs free of tension when not working, with a slight conical section on the loose pulley to bring it easily into place when its services are required. You and I have found that the mere matter of getting the power to our machines is worthy of our thought, and we find in the factory we are visiting some machines directly motor driven, others so driven in groups, others connected up in sections, each according to what study has shown to be normal to its best productivity. We find also that a 'tickler' of belts is kept for study, which has shown that belts at a certain age and in certain uses have a rather definite life, and that when they shall have become so old it is necessary to watch lest by some sudden breakage they stop a valuable machine. So each belt in the shop is no longer under general but under particular supervision, the time when it may be expected to show wear being known when the belt is put in service new. And our belt men work in the noon hour and after hours, for it is good form to watch the belts, so that repairs are made before wear goes too far. We find also that we have gone into what seems small details in other ways. The shop we are in does not make its vise benches of heavy hardwood plank, for these warp, and when they wear in spots it is needful to replace more sometimes than is worn. This shop has made its benches of heavy softwood plank and on top of them puts crosswise thin and narrow matched strips of hardwood, any two or three of which when worn can be replaced without disturbing others or interrupting work.

"It would be possible to continue our factory inspection into other details, but enough has been done for our purpose, and we will go for a moment into the tool and stock rooms. In the former not only is care taken that tools as they come back from use are sharpened or repaired so that there may be no question of their readiness for service when they are reissued, but to save what seems a small detail in records you indicate the number of tools or fittings that any one workman has by the shape of his brass check hung upon the hook. In the stock room is kept a running inventory on slips attached to every bin, so that the question as to how many there are of any item in the assorted stock never arises, and not only so, but there is provided an inward and an outward bin for each item of stock, and sometimes a third one maintained at a fixed quantity to save questions.

"From this atmosphere of precision and care we walk back to the shop office. The superintendent tells us that the material bought has been selected as the result of long evolution as to its chemical and metallurgical contents, its shape and size, and that frequent examination by physical and other tests is made to insure its being perfect in all these respects, while at the same time constant experimenting progresses to determine whether there is made or can be made something better suited to the duty, or something at a lower price as well suited thereto. And, as we sit down in his pleasant room, the superintendent goes on to say that he has reached the point on his automatic machinery where he secures 96 per cent operating time and that he is studying how to bring his lathes above the 80 per cent of efficient time, which is what they at the moment represent.

"I have dwelt, gentlemen, too long, and yet, as you know, very inadequately, upon certain details of certain phases of a modern shop in order to bring your minds and mine together on a single broad truth that underlies all that has been said. This is, that in your buildings or machines or various equipment and in your material the most exacting study has been used to fit each for the purpose for which it is intended. You have spent, or others have spent in your behalf, years of patient experimenting and sums that thousands will not represent to determine how best to adapt all these various elements to one another so that their relations shall be harmonious, productive, efficient, and economical. By economy you have not meant the absence of spending, for these machines and these methods have cost much through many years, but you regard it as well spent. As between the man who offers you a machine as a cheap tool and another who asks a greater price, you think first of the question, "What will these tools do?" and it is the relation of their productiveness to their cost that guides your decision. Replace, let us suppose, in the shop we have just visited in our thought the present modern equipment with another of the same class, but selected chiefly because it is cheaper in its first cost, and you and I know the result would be disaster, for the lesson as regards machines has been well learned that productiveness is more important than first price.

"One more look into that shop before we change our theme. The material in the stock room, the carefully designed tools in the tool room, the machines carefully selected and installed with equal care—these are all dead things. Turn on the power and the light, and if that be all such action as results is more likely to be disastrous than effective. They will follow the laws of their mechanical nature and wreck themselves unless the conditions for useful work are provided. There are few places more dreary than a great shop with its dead equipment; like a steamer in midocean when the engines stop, there is a sense of the absence of life. Let us look along the lines of polished machinery and upon the piles of ready material and on the varied accessories and equipment and think for a moment of the next step.

"Is there to be an end at this point of the study and the patient care and watchfulness that has guided us so far? Is the process of selection and of economical investment based upon production to be changed just at this point? Having the best equipment bought and arranged with its cost as a secondary thing and its productiveness as the primary thing, shall we put at these machines men whose cost is the primary thing and whose productiveness we aim to extract by a process called 'shop discipline'? Having with great care fitted tool to mechanism, shall we or shall we not use equal care to fit the men to both? Having utilized the laws of light and of power and of mechanics to the full, intelligently and carefully, shall we or shall we not now utilize the laws of human nature to the full with the same intelligence and care? Shall we recognize that at the point where our thought is halting we are passing over from the inert to the responsive and that in addition to all the other laws and conditions under which we have so carefully worked hitherto there has come into play a new law now, the law of life and growth and thought?

"Here we touch the very core of our subject, and upon the way in which we deal with it shall it be known whether we are of the light or of the darkness; for our fine equipment, with its perfectly balanced relations may mean after all that we have learned but the smallest part of our subject, and that the full light of day has not yet dawned on us. I am not here to urge details of dealing with men any more than to urge details of the tools and materials we see, but I am here to urge that as the laws of nature are utilized by us all after keen inquiry into them in the mechanical and material side of our work, so the laws of human nature shall be given at least as keen study in the living and productive side of our work. For, since both the laws of mechanics and the laws of human nature are but a partial manifestation, in my thought, of the law of God, there can be no harmony and no basis for permanent peace and for the highest production until we have readjusted our factories so that they operate in accordance with the laws of human nature. Is a man doing the best he can for you and me when he runs his machine tool well? Perhaps, and perhaps not. In a large eastern shop early this month a young mechanic at a fine turret lathe was producing certain work at low cost while earning high pay. The element of labor cost was so small in his product that the cost department had to use a microscope to find it. This was good, but was it all the good there was to be had from the man? As we talked with him he spoke with a smile of having earned $50 extra the week before because he had thought of something while his turret lathe was working, and had reflected upon it, and knowing that his employer was a man of broad and just spirit, he had, after working his thought out carefully as he stood by his machine, gone to his employer with his idea, and his employer had not only thanked him and given him demonstration of his good will by liberal wages, but had handed him $50 besides. Thoughtful men need not be told that the particular type of narrowness and harshness which is concealed sometimes behind the words 'practical' and 'hard-headed' would have prevented the ideas ever being conveyed to the owner of a shop run on those lines.

"I recall one day being asked to look at a running machine and having the workman say to me, 'If this tool can be adjusted in such a way I can do twice as much.' Does anyone suppose that stern and narrow discipline would have brought that doubling of product? In this enlightened city it may perhaps be doubted whether and to what extent there exists such shortness of vision and narrowness of outlook as that of which I have spoken, but it was a matter of sworn testimony before me but a few weeks ago that in a large shop a mechanic whose record was good was kept at home three days by the death and funeral of his son. When at the end of that time he returned to his work he not only lost the three days' pay, but his absence was counted against his efficiency record and was sufficient to so alter that record for the ensuing six months as to cost him 25 cents a day for the following half year, and his explanation, though admittedly true, was not received because discipline had to be maintained. And it was true also in another case, where a man, because of scarlet fever in his home, was quarantined therein by the authorities, that when he returned to work at the end of a fortnight he also lost not only his wages for the time of absence, but was demoted on his efficiency record because of the absence so that he lost 25 cents daily for six months to follow, even though his explanation was admittedly correct. It seems strange that men who so carefully adjust themselves to one part of nature's laws in their plants should be so hopelessly ignorant of another part of those same laws when it comes to deal with men. Is there anyone that wonders that the two cases I have mentioned so rankled in the minds of the hundreds of workmen in that factory as ultimately to cause annoyance and expense to the management outweighing manyfold the pitifully small question of wages involved?

"Let us look briefly at the situation in the textile mills at Lawrence and get at some facts concealed by the dust of conflict there. The mills had sometime ago accepted a reduction of their working time from 58 to 56 hours without change of pay, and a recent legislature reduced the hours for the women and children in those mills to 54 hours weekly. This required shutting down the mills two hours weekly, because they were so balanced that the men could not work in some departments unless the women worked in others. The difference in time was two fifty-sixths, a fraction less than 4 per cent, and the mills gave notice—observe not all mills upon whom this bore, but some of them; those in this one city—they gave notice, I say, that this exact amount must be deducted from the wages of their people. Those wages were already far below the average American wage. A rate of $6.50 weekly would represent the average woman's earnings before the cut was made. A strike ensued, and by that strike has been lost manyfold a year's difference in wage. Apart from this money loss there has come with it the ill will and distrust of thousands of operatives; and now, after the distrust has been gained and the loss has been incurred, the mills concede an advanced wage scale, about one-half larger than the cut which they made at first, so that by their own action they have shown that, despite the money loss from weeks of idleness, they can pay an advance, and that the former deduction was made, to say the least, in ignorance, for if made with knowledge it approached the criminal.

"I do not mean in the faintest way to approve the excesses of the strikers any more than I mean to approve the excesses, so far as they may have existed, on the part of the authorities. I simply mean to detach these excesses on either part and to consider the fundamentals of management and their results. The mills are now paying more wages than before the strike and paying them to a force resentful of injustice, for the most ignorant man knows that if the mill can advance his wages 5 per cent to-day, after the loss they have suffered, the original cut of less than 4 per cent was a shameful thing. I trust it will not be understood that these cases are mentioned as implying in the faintest way that in this enlightened community such things occur, but of late and with just cause there has been universal outcry against the excesses to which some men claiming to represent labor have gone, and there is a certain danger that injustice may be done as a result of this righteous wrath. Crime is horrible and always to be condemned and murder is not to be condoned, but there are crimes against human nature that are not within the scope of the statute law, and the revolt of human nature against them has as sound a basis as our proper outcry against the more overt criminal act. If greed kills through sweating and child labor, it is not less murderous, only less rapid and less merciful, than he who stabs to slay. With the men who enter our factories enters the greatest force in all production. I mean the responsiveness of those men to leadership. They work, indeed, because they must needs earn their bread, and it is needful that supervision should be closely exercised for manifest reasons; but neither the need for bread nor the closest supervision will draw out the best that the workman has to give. That can only be done by the righteous adjustment of wage to product, by the absence alike of injustice and of charity, by the opening of the door of opportunity, by the absence of driving and the presence of leading, by the selection of the man for the task and the adjustment of the task to the man, by the instructions of the man in his task or, if unfitted for it, then in some other task for which he is more fitted, by the spirit of candor and frankness between the employer and man, by the willingness to hear and wait, by the closest possible touch practicable in great factories between the management and the working force. It has been said that corporations have no souls. This is a pity if true, for the men in the shops have souls, and the coming into the minds and hearts of the men who run the corporations of sufficient soul to give them a basis for appeal to and cooperation with the souls of men at the machine may make the difference between profit and loss to the corporation.

"Finally, my friends, I think many of us have stopped too soon on the path of scientific development of our industries. The man is infinitely well worth study and infinitely more difficult to study than the machine. Does it not come to you with something of a shock that we are all careful to have a machine heavy and strong enough for its work, but that we rarely think whether a laborer may have some heart trouble or some other physical weakness that makes him unfit for the heavy lifting we ask him to do? We all believe in clean shops, but do we think enough of the human element to be careful to avoid sweeping when the men are about because of the well-known fact that dust carries all manner of disease germs which men breathe? The working out of the machine has been a long evolution and the working out of the study of men may also be of long evolution. It can not be hastily done. It requires patience; so do the machines. Your machines are complex; how much more so the man with his human mind and heart. But if the patience is exercised there is in the man the responsive spirit the machine lacks, and that spirit, led and not driven, guided and not abused, is a power in industry of which the wisest of us do not yet dream. Without it we may be able, or we may not, to profit temporarily. With it the age of industrial conquest opens to us.

"There are keen men among you, I know, waiting to ask such questions as: 'What about the closed shop? Do you approve it?' That is not hard to answer. I do not approve the act of any man or men who would deny to another the right to work at any lawful occupation when, where, and for whatever wage he will. Still less do I approve the continuous making of profits where wages or working conditions exist that cramp the manhood or degrade the womanhood or stunt the childhood of our land. I recall no policy ever avowed by labor that is a worse offense than the sweat shop. To accept dividends or profits out of human conditions that prevent a decent living is quite as bad as, perhaps worse than, to demand a closed shop. Let me read here a little poem which I found accidentally to-day:

"THE REAL GUIDE.

"You may bring to your office and put in a frame
A motto as fine as its paint,
But if you're a crook when you're playing the game
That motto won't make you a saint;
You can stick up the placards all over the hall,
But here is the word I announce,
It isn't the motto that hangs on the wall,
But the motto you live that counts!

"If the motto says 'Smile' and you carry a frown,
'Do it now' and you linger and wait,
If the motto says 'Help' and you trample men down,
If the motto says 'Love' and you hate,
You won't get away with the mottoes you stall,
For Truth will come forth with a bounce;
It isn't the motto that hangs on the wall,
But the motto you live that counts!

"But it will be urged that the representatives of labor are sometimes unreasonable. I presume they are. I have heard labor leaders whom I trust say so. I have known labor leaders struggle hard and unselfishly to prevent their own followers from being unreasonable. But the answer to the charge is easy. Let him that is without sin among us cast the first stone. If we are always sure we are entirely just and wise, there may be less unreasonableness found on our path.

"What, then, does the new industrial day involve? Profits are no longer the supreme law. The regard for the legal rights of the citizen is expanding into a recognition of other rights, moral, physical, and personal. If we are not becoming our brother's helpers, we are ceasing to be our brother's destroyers. We are thinking more carefully how far man may rightly fatten on man. The public looks no longer with patience on reducing wages to maintain profits or dividends. Even to cheapen costs on a falling market it is no longer thought just to pay workmen less for the same labor. More and better things are expected than a constant struggle between profits at the top and penury at the bottom in the same establishment.

"Will the business world recognize the new order and face it fairly and squarely and meet it halfway? If so, well for the business world. Will the business world simply stand pat? Then ill for the business world. Attorneys general come and go. Laws are made and changed and repealed. Both arise from the spirit that is abroad in the land. Both are nonessential details if the spirit is right. Will the business world go on as it has gone heretofore? Then the laws and attorneys general are needed. Will the business world accept the larger spirit of the new day? Then attorneys general and laws are harmless. No ill threatens any great industry whose spirit is, first, that of equity and liberality to its workers and to its consumers, and, second, to its own personal profit. But where profit is first and is to be had at any cost of human fatigue or poverty or evil conditions or at the cost of special privilege extracting high prices from the consuming public, then ill does threaten that industry. There are slow and sure paths to profit and quick and dangerous roads that seem also to point that way. We can mistake conservatism for conservation and end by all falling into the ditch.

"The new day means not compromise, but comprehension; not alone humanity or welfare work, though these are good, but a larger outlook, a spirit of earnest self-criticism looking inward and the spirit of 'lend a hand' looking outward. It means care for our profit's sake, aye, and for our manhood's sake, for the growth of the men by whose efforts we prosper. I say 'growth of the men,' not merely growth of the wage, for a living wage means more than food or clothes. Our industries must stimulate and not shackle the growth of all the elements that mean uplift and progress for our men. I have not appealed to your sympathy or to your sentiment. I ask that we both, in our use of human forces, study those forces as we study others—learn the facts and adapt ourselves to them. A great factory should be, in a sense, like a school, for all in it are learning—master and men alike—and no limit can be set to the attainments of him who hath a teachable spirit. Of old it was said to describe a city that was glad and secure that it should be full of little children playing in the streets thereof. Will our industrial growth be complete until we can say the city shall be full of happy people working in the mills thereof?

"Past your beautiful city flows a stream which, expanding into the lake beyond, reaches at last the great falls and there becomes not only a thing of beauty, but, in truth, of light and power. Can there not flow from your great industries here another stream which shall expand throughout our land until it shall become not only a thing of beauty in itself, but of light and power also; and, as the very name of your city was taken from the river flowing past it, may you not also become, in truth, the outlet for a flow of influence that shall be greater, finer, and more permanent in its results?"

TOBACCO STATISTICS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (H. R. 13988) to authorize the Director of the Census to collect and publish additional statistics of tobacco, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments. They are satisfactory to the committee and also to the introducer of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendments were agreed to.

PARCEL-POST AND POSTAL-EXPRESS SITUATION IN CONGRESS.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from Senator OBADIAH GARDNER to the people of the United States on the parcel-post and postal-express situation in Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to print a certain letter in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity of examining the letter. Does it contain any criticism of Congress?

Mr. DICKINSON. No; nothing out of the way.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether it contains any criticism of the House.

Mr. DICKINSON. No; it does not contain any criticism of the House. It refers to the fact that all Members in Congress are not fully advised in regard to the parcel post.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

"To the people of the United States:

"Since my election to the United States Senate I have clearly seen that among my duties the very first was the subject of cheaper rates for the small packet or shipment, the agitation for which has mostly been conducted under the name of the 'parcel post.' I asked myself this question: 'What is the object of a "parcel post?"' The answer was, 'to obtain cheaper rates by postal carriage for the small shipment than the express companies exact; in short, to secure relief from exorbitant express charges.'

"There has always existed the feeling that express charges were too high. Investigation shows that they amount to $31.20 for the average ton of parcels, while the freight charge for the average ton is $1.90. The express charge, on the average, in this country is about sixteen times the freight. In other countries it is only about five times the freight charge, i. e., the average ton of freight is about 85 cents, and of express about $4.25. All of which means that our express rates are from two to three times as high as they should be. If we are to obtain relief from the express company charge, then it must be by getting postal rates that are substantially lower than they give. The whole question of 'parcel post' is a question of lower rates. If the rates are not lower, then the 'parcel post' would be simply a paper scheme of no service to anybody. If the 'parcel post' rates were actually higher, such a 'parcel post' would be a cheat of the whole reform. At this point I call your attention to the rates themselves so you may judge for yourselves. The 'parcel post' bills before Congress fall into two divisions—first, the one to be reported by the Post Office Committee of the House, which (barring the rural delivery section) fixes the international flat rate at 12 cents a pound; second, the other bills fixing 8 cents a pound. These rates, in the table following, are compared with present express company rates for a distance of 196 miles, which is the average length of the journey of express packages, and presumably about the average journey which postal shipments would make:

Table comparing parcel-post rates with express-company rates and postal-express rates.

Rate.	Parcel post.		Express-company rate.	Postal-express feasible rate.
	12 cents per pound.	8 cents per pound.
1 pound	$0.12	$0.08	[1] $0.10	$0.07
2 pounds	.24	.16	[1] .16	.07
3 pounds	.36	.24	[1] .24	.08
4 pounds	.48	.32	[1] .32	.09
5 pounds	.60	.40	.40	.10

7 pounds	.84	.56	.45	.14
8 pounds	.96	.64	.45	.16
9 pounds	1.08	.72	.45	.18
10 pounds	1.20	.80	.45	.19
11 pounds	1.32	.88	.50	.20
Total	7.92	5.28	3.97	1.40

[1] If prepaid, the express companies now carry books at a rate of 8 cents a pound, and merchandise, or fourth-class mail matter, at 16 cents a pound.

"It appears that the 12-cent 'parcel-post' rate is about one-half higher than present express rates, for the average distance men ship, and the 8-cent rate about one-fourth greater. All these bills mean, at best, is that up to 2 pounds they give only as good a rate as the express companies and will deliver on rural routes. On weights above 2 pounds the bills fix much higher rates than the express companies. If during the year you wish to make shipments covering the whole gamut of 11 different weights, your total bill would be $1.40 by postal express; $3.97 by private express; $5.28 by 8-cent 'parcel post'; and $7.92 by 12-cent 'parcel post.'

"To be more simple, the express companies now charge an average of $31.20 the ton of packages; the 8-cent 'parcel-post' rate would make this $160 a ton; and the 12-cent rate $240 a ton. And yet even the express charge is at least twice as high as it should be. There is only one duty for me to think of in such a case. It is to expose the fearful cheat of the people's hopes which the so-called 'parcel-post' bills now pending mean.

"I stop only long enough to say that even the rural-delivery features of these measures, proposing 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound up to 11, are nearly worthless. They limit the mailability to fourth class; and there is scarcely a thing produced on the farm that falls within fourth class or that the farmer would be allowed to ship to his customer in town, such as butter, eggs, poultry, dressed; hams, sausage, etc. I feel it my duty to say in the most emphatic manner possible that these bills, if passed, will prove the greatest hoax ever inflicted upon a people; not to say that the express companies will welcome such an accomplishment as merely a new lease of power to maintain their unrighteous charges.

A SYSTEM OF POSTAL EXPRESS.

"What is the remedy? I answer that my study and that of other Members of Congress, probably a majority of the House and close to if not a majority of the Senate, indicates the remedy to be the elimination of the parasitic express company. The Government should take them over, at a fair value, and reduce their rates by about half for all express shippers, and extend the service, through rural delivery, to the farmer and the country store. Economic studies of the subject show that even greater reductions might be made on the very light weights, as shown in the table; and we have the rural-delivery structure paid in advance and ready, waiting—empty one might say—to receive the farm products and convey them direct from the farmer to the consumer. And this is the great point to be achieved. Farm products for which the farmer received $6,000,000,000 last year sold to the consumer at $13,000,000,000, and this because there was no direct transportation from the farm to the kitchen. If we take over the express companies and couple their town-delivery system with the rural-delivery system, and both with the railways, when necessary, the consumer of foodstuffs could buy and ship direct from the farmer, the delivering postal van collecting the price and remitting it back to the farm. The high cost of living in the vital necessaries might thus be really reached and remedied.

"Why buy out the express companies, you may say? Well, there are several reasons, serious and substantial ones, some of which only can be stated in so brief a space. They are:

"(a) In order to secure the express-railway contracts under which for distances of 200 miles and up the express-railway pay is a little less than one-half of the postal-railway pay.

"(b) By taking over the express plants we do not disturb business, or encounter the objections of the country merchant, but by reducing express rates to the desirable point he will share in the benefit, and will have the railway service brought to his door along with the farmer.

"(c) We need adequate transportation for the small shipment. The railways refuse to treat it under 100 pounds. The postal system is the only one that can eliminate the accounting which makes the express-package charge so large.

"(d) By a complete system and the postal van farmers can market their truck cheap direct to the consumer and share with him the difference between what the consumer pays and the farmer now receives.

"No system of 'parcel post' can accomplish these things in our country in a sufficient way. The rate of express-railway pay is vital to a reasonable rate. On a 3,000-mile journey the express company would be paying the railways less than 6 cents a pound, the 'parcel post' would have to pay a little over 10 cents a pound, and on long journeys of the shipment nearly the whole charge would be that payable to the railways. Again, since it is the evils of the express charge that the remedy is designed to meet, it ought to be broad enough to extend to all express shippers and give them the reduced rates to which they are equally entitled. The 'parcel-post' proposition and its flat rate seems to be designed, by the 11-pound limit, to be just big enough for the patron of the merchant to get to the mail-order house, and the flat rate to give the mail-order house, his distant rival, an unnatural equality. Nobody intended this, of course. But nobody has seriously intended anything in any of these 'parcel-post' schemes—I mean in the way of definite and specific rates and the remedy needed to secure relief from express charges. They are of as little practical service as the snow men we made as children.

"The trouble has been that people who 'had not the time' to think this matter out have gone on the assumption that a 'parcel post' was something definite, like a railway or steamboat service. But it is not. If the rates proposed are too high, such 'parcel post' is simply nothing; and to make it workable you will have to have a relatively low rate of railway pay. You would need, too, elastic rates adapted to moving the traffic and not killing it. Flat rates, such as proposed, would simply cheat the shipper on the short journey, and to some extent the Government on the long journey, for the benefit of the distant merchant and no one else, while killing more useful traffic than they would carry.

"In this connection I quote from an article written by Mr. George P. Hampton, secretary of the Farmers' National Committee on Postal Reform. Mr. Hampton says:

"The farmer, the consumer, and the local merchant have a common interest in the cheapest possible service for the short haul. They have little or no interest in the long haul. The retail trade between consumer and merchant, consumer and producer, or producer and local merchant, is essentially a short-distance proposition. The prosperity of all these will be best served by making the lowest possible rates for the short haul.

"The magnitude of the robbery of the majority of the people for the benefit of the few, which is inevitable with a flat rate, will perhaps be more apparent to some—indifferent Members of Congress, for example—if the cost and charges are shown in tons. He would indeed be a small merchant or farmer whose total parcel shipments for a year, under a favorable rate, would not exceed a ton.

The robbery in the short haul.

	25 miles.	50 miles.	200 miles.	500 miles.	1,000 miles.
Average mail pay to the railroads per ton.	$2.25	$4.50	$18.00	$45.00	$90.00
Collect and delivery and general expense.	24.00	24.00	24.00	24.00	24.00
Total cost	26.25	28.50	42.00	69.00	114.00
Rate per ton of the 8-cent flat per pound rate	160.00	160.00	160.00	160.00	160.00
Excess charges	133.75	132.50	118.00	91.00	46.00

"Collect and delivery and general expense cost are computed at 6 cents per package for an average weight of 6 pounds.

The subsidy in the long haul.

	2,000 miles.	3,000 miles.	3,600 miles.
Average mail pay to the railroads per ton	$180.00	$270.00	$324.00
Collect and delivery and general expense	24.00	24.00	24.00
Total cost	204.00	294.00	348.00
Rate per ton of the 8-cent flat per pound rate	160.00	160.00	160.00
Subsidy to long-distance shipper	44.00	134.00	188.00

"Public welfare demands that the Government in establishing a general parcel post shall impose no burdens upon nor grant special privileges to any class. The people must not be taxed for the benefit of the few.

"The flat rate, by the excessive rate of 500 per cent above cost on the short haul and rates of 50 to 100 per cent below cost on the long haul, tends to force producer and consumer apart, whereas public welfare demands that they be brought as close together as possible.

"The volume of business is powerfully influenced by the rate. It must be low enough to move the traffic. To make the short-haul rate over five times the cost is to prevent the growth of the short-haul business.

"The evils of the flat rate to the short-distance shipper increase with the rate. The 8-cent rate is bad, but the 12-cent rate ($240 per ton) would be infinitely worse.

"If the flat rate could be established without increasing the cost of any short haul beyond a fair, self-sustaining charge, its unfairness might be open to question; but a flat rate which, in order to make the service as a whole self-sustaining must be based on a mean-distance charge, of necessity must make the charge on the short haul excessive and give the long haul a rate away below cost. It is undemocratic, violates every principle of square dealing, and is against public welfare.

"The bill I have introduced in the Senate for postal express and the elimination of the express companies is similar to the Lewis and Goeke bills which have been introduced in the House. This movement is not an individual one, but represents the collaborative efforts of the Members of Congress who wish to secure a real remedy for express conditions, really low rates as shown in the table, and transportation advantages for the small shipment which all elements of the people can share. These are the Members of Congress who are working actively and militantly for the cause. The others are mostly standing shivering between the demands of the friends of 'parcel post' and the threats of the local merchants; and for the most part have not examined the subject enough to know that the 'parcel-post' rates are much higher than the express rates they are intended to reduce.

"The principles in these bills have been indorsed by the leading farm organizations of the country, a large majority of the labor organizations, by consumers, and by merchants and manufacturers who have opposed and will continue to oppose, and that strenuously, the establishment or extension of a flat-rate parcel post. These facts are easily ascertainable by every Senator and Congressman. Congressional documents giving comprehensive detailed explanation of every question involved are at their command, and among their colleagues are some of the best posted men in the country on such matters.

"Postal express can be demonstrated to be in the interest of all the people, the farmer, the consumer, and the retail merchant, for whom those opposed to any such systems have shown such solicitude. Let me inquire of the retail merchant if he does not think that it will be of advantage to him to cut in half the present extortionate rates of the express companies? Let me ask him if it would not be to his advantage to enlarge our rural delivery mail service so that he could send out his goods to the purchaser under what would be a mail-order service, reducing much of the expenses under which he is now burdened? A flat-rate service would give him no relief, but puts him at the mercy of the mail-order house, and I am opposed to any such system, but a postal-express service, with the cost of transportation determined by the weight and distance as to article and shipment, would simply require him to pay for the privilege he enjoyed and everybody else according to the privilege they enjoyed.

"The express companies are not, in the true meaning of the word, transportation companies, as they have no lines of transportation, no franchise rights, and only are enabled to do business by reason of transportation lines already established, which could do the business as well as they. Further, they did not invest any money in the business at the start except a carpetbag and a man to carry it from Watertown to Boston. The business as it developed bought all their equipment, and the excess profits, amounting at present to $160,000,000, are invested in other securities that draw separate dividends independent of the express business. Their rates are based on about $200,000,000 capitalization, which accounts for high rates. All we want is their physical properties and contracts with railroads, amounting to about $39,000,000. This would be paid for in one year at the present rates and give a complete service all over the country. They originated to fill a deficiency in our transportation system and are parasitic in their nature.

"Under these conditions, for Congress to fritter away time on flat-rate proposals and refuse to give consideration to a scientific solution of one of the most crying evils of the day is simply to raise the question of their fitness for office.

"The farmer and the consumer suffer because of the lack of an adequate express delivery service. Only the Government can supply such a service. Produce goes to waste on the farm for lack of a market and the poor of the near-by cities starve for the lack of the produce. Congress has it in its power to remedy this.

"If the people do not wish to have served to them by this Congress the most unsatisfactory piece of legislation in the history of legislation they had better notify their Representatives and Senators at once.

"If you want a real 'parcel post' tell them you want the express companies eliminated and the postal system substituted in their place. Act at once, for if you miss now it may be a generation before Congress can be brought to the subject again.

"Very respectfully,

"OBADIAH GARDNER."

TO REENACT EXISTING LAWS AGAINST BRIBERY, ETC.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained from the House on April 9, 1912, and I therefore ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement respecting the bill H. R. 8158, introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL], which seeks unnecessarily to reenact existing law on bribery, and so forth, and which I have heretofore analyzed. I have been in Alabama presiding over a Democratic State convention [applause on the Democratic side] and was elected a delegate to the Baltimore convention of the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the reason why I was not able to make this statement at an earlier day. I was attending to that business and returned from Alabama a few days ago.

Mr. MADDEN. I congratulate the State of Alabama on her good judgment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the matter indicated may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, on April 6 I stated to the House the views of the Committee on the Judiciary in regard to the bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL]. At a regular meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary, held on Tuesday, April 9, 1912, the bill H. R. 8158 was under further consideration by the committee. By a vote the committee decided not to favorably report the bill. No vote was cast in behalf of a favorable report of the bill. At this same meeting of the committee, on April 9, the committee, by express vote, on motion, approved as the views of the committee the statement made by the chairman in regard to this bill (H. R. 8158) in the House of Representatives on April 6, 1912. The vote of the committee was unanimous. The following gentlemen are the members of the Committee on the Judiciary:

HENRY D. CLAYTON, Alabama, chairman; ROBERT L. HENRY, Texas; EDWIN Y. WEBB, North Carolina; CHARLES C. CARLIN, Virginia; WILLIAM W. RUCKER, Missouri; WILLIAM C. HOUSTON, Tennessee; JOHN C. FLOYD, Arkansas; ROBERT Y. THOMAS, Jr., Kentucky; JAMES M. GRAHAM, Illinois; H. GARLAND DUPRÉ, Louisiana; MARTIN W. LITTLETON, New York; WALTER I. McCOY, New Jersey; JOHN W. DAVIS, West Virginia; DANIEL J. McGILLICUDDY, Maine; JOHN A. STERLING, Illinois; REUBEN O. MOON, Pennsylvania; EDWIN W. HIGGINS, Connecticut; PAUL HOWLAND, Ohio; FRANK M. NYE, Minnesota; GEORGE W. NORRIS, Nebraska; FRANCIS H. DODDS, Michigan.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if there is anybody else in the House who desires to ask unanimous consent or anything——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following letter:

Yours, respectfully, BURTON L. FRENCH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman will be excused from serving on the committee. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21279, the Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. HAY in the chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. How much more time is there remaining on the two sides for general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ascertain. There are 10 hours and 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes, or so much as he may occupy, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER].

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman yields, can we get any idea of what the intention of the committee is in reference to an evening session? Does the committee desire to have an evening session?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know whether we will or not.

Mr. MANN. I thought possibly the gentleman would know. I am perfectly willing——

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman desire an evening session?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not desire any session.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman will get his desire, then.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Chairman, the phase of this bill which I expect to discuss is the parcel-post question. There has already been so much discussion on this question that I presume I will not be able to say anything new upon the subject. I have not cared so far to take up the time of the House in a discussion of those questions which were more particularly party questions, because in nearly every case Members had already made up their minds how they were going to vote; but this is a question that to a certain extent seems to be open, and therefore I feel like giving the Members the benefit of my views. If it does not aid you in coming to any conclusion, it will perhaps serve to strengthen me in my own views upon the subject. I am in favor of a general parcel-post system, because I believe it will be beneficial not only to the people generally but especially to our country districts and those living upon rural routes. It would seem to me sufficiently clear that if by any legislation we can make life in the country more attractive and more desirable, we ought to be willing to adopt that legislation, not only because the country people are entitled to it, but because it is a sound economic policy. The one thing which our last census has shown is the great drift of the population to the cities and the desertion of the country, and that fact in itself is enough largely to account for the higher cost of living. The consumers have been greatly increasing and the producers have been diminishing. Now, then, why is it that people prefer to live in the crowded cities, to work in the shops amidst the dirt and noise that is there and under very undesirable circumstances, rather than to go out into the fresh air of the country where life is, or ought to be, as one would judge, more pleasant? It is simply because the attractions of city life, the social advantages which you get there, are desired by the men and by their families, and that is the principal reason why they wish to live there. Those of you who, like myself, were brought up in the country—and there are perhaps a few here who were brought up on sure-enough country farms—and took a part in the country life know that one of the greatest disadvantages of the country life, as it was when we were boys, and one reason why you could not keep the boys and girls on the farm, was on account of the dreadful loneliness of the country life and the feeling that you were separated from the thought and action of the great world. You would only get your mail once a week, perhaps, when you went 4 or 5 miles to the post office. You were utterly out of communication with world events and most of the time out of communication with your neighbors.

Now, these conditions have been greatly changed. The farmers themselves have largely brought it about. They have done much in the way of making the conditions in the country districts better. They get together in a social way. They have their harvest homes and their picnic gatherings; they have their lodges and their granges and their social organizations. They have better schools and better churches. They have built for themselves better roads, and they have better carriages and means of transportation by which they can get about and see one another. All this has made a wonderful change in the ability to endure country life, and of those influences which have brought it about it seems to me that no one has had more effect than our rural mail service, which brings daily to the home of the farmer the daily papers, with the news of what is happening in this great world of which he is a part. The happenings all over the world are known almost immediately out upon these rural lines. The pulse throb of the thought of the world is felt not only in the crowded cities each day, but out at the very extreme of the free rural-delivery lines in this country. That is a great thing, and it is making country life more desirable every day.

But there is a very strange anomaly in our rural service. While the rural carrier comes to the farmer's door with the daily mail, and while the farmer may want some little article of merchandise brought to him, which he may need, yet that rural carrier is not permitted to bring it. He goes on with his wagon empty. The farmers themselves have built, as we all know, what we call farmers' telephone lines, so that they are now not only in communication with each other in that quick way, but also with the towns and with the stores at which they deal. They can phone to their store for anything they may need; but how is it to be brought to them? The country storekeeper and the storekeepers in the small towns can not afford to send those articles out. The farmer, if he needs the article, will have to quit his work and spend half a day in going for it. If he needs a plowpoint, if he finds that somebody is coming to visit him to-morrow and he wants a few pounds of tea, there is no way that it can be brought to him, and yet this rural carrier is going to pass the door and could easily bring whatever article is needed and deposit it there, if permitted to do so by our laws.

When this rural service was begun the carrier was permitted to bring these little articles, but it is not permitted now. That is a part of the rural service which would be beneficial to the country people, and in a like way a similar serivce to that would be beneficial, I believe, over the entire country. Why is it we can not have it?

It is a strange thing that we should boast that we are the most civilized, the most advanced of all nations, and that we have the freest Government of any in the world, and yet have not this parcel-post system, while every other civilized nation in the world has it, and many of those that can not claim to be more than half civilized. They have it even in China, and it is successful there. Why is it we can not have it here? The people are demanding it, the Post Office Department is in favor of it, and have been advocating it for years, and yet it is impossible to get this legislation through.

There is no question as to the opposition of the express companies. Some gentlemen have endeavored upon the floor of the House to make us believe that this legislation was in favor of the express companies, but such a proposition is absurd. There is other opposition, however, and this, I presume, nearly every Member of Congress has felt. A great many of the rural merchants—at least a great many in my district, and I have no doubt a great many in the districts of other Members—have sent in petitions to Congress saying that the parcel-post system would injure their business. Now, that is a matter for serious consideration. I would not willingly vote for anything that would injure our local merchants, materially injure their business, or put them out of business. I do not believe anyone would wish to do so, because those communities need those merchants. There should not be any jealousy between the local people and their merchants. A town can not exist without merchants and the merchants can not exist without the town, and they should work in harmony. I have no sympathy whatever with the person who is not willing to buy his goods at home. I believe that everyone should buy the provisions which he needs, so far as possible, in his home town. I believe he should buy there, so far as possible, everything he wants to use; that he should buy his clothing there. Nowadays, with the wonderful development which has come to all parts of our country, you can get just as good things in your home town, and cheaper, and get clothes made in as good style, as at any other place. You do not need to go to the large cities to have this done.

But will it have that effect? Will it hurt the local merchants? I am firmly of the opinion that it will not do so. I think this rural service, especially, will be of great benefit to the local merchants. I think it will help them to hold the trade of their communities, because their patrons who deal with them can call them up on the phone and have articles sent out, and in that way, by being able to convenience their customers, it will enable them to hold their trade. And, more than that, by having the general parcel-post system they can easily supply what their patrons need. They can send and get it for you, and in that way they can hold your trade and prevent your going to the larger towns to do your business.

Now, this is not entirely theory. It is something that has been demonstrated, as I understand, in practice where the parcel post has been in use. And, as corroborating that, I wish to read just briefly from the reports of the investigations compiled by Senator BOURNE and published by the Government. Here is the report of the consul general of Belgium, on page 51, where they have a very successful parcel-post system, as follows:

> The parcel post has proven very successful in Belgium, not only with the public but the Government has realized large profits in this department; but there are no statistics published to show details.
> One proof of its success is in the fact that the Government is now studying the project to extend the parcel-post system to include packages up to 100 kilos (220 pounds) or even more in weight.
>
> It is interesting to note what effect this service has on the business of the small merchants in the country villages, whether they suffer a material loss as a consequence of the larger merchants in the cities supplying their customers, and it appears they have not suffered a loss in their business, for they are the very ones who make the most use of the parcel-post service. If they do not have an article asked for, they at once order it for their customer and have it sent by parcel post.
>
> In general the people of the country and the small towns, except the rich, do not use the parcel post much in ordering things from the city, but buy at home, as they did before this system was started.
> The richer class and the summer people who pass several weeks each year at the numerous seashore and mountain resorts of Belgium use the parcel post a great deal, but even before the advent of this service they always went to the city to do their most important shopping.

Now, also, in France, where they have a very successful parcel-post system, I read from consular report:

> The administration has not yet received any complaint from shopkeepers in small towns concerning the advantages which large department or city stores would reap from the parcel-post system and the patronage it would cost them. It seems that they themselves find great facilities in this service for the needs of their trade.

The same is true in a number of other countries, which I can not now take time to read. A great deal of this has already been read into the RECORD by other Members in their speeches.

Now, then, these reports would seem to be entirely in accordance with my views. The theory that this mail-order business will be developed by the parcel-post system does not seem to be in accord with the facts in other countries. It is true that in some countries it appears that the mail-order business is developed; but it would not appear to have developed on account of the establishment of the parcel post, but is in spite of it, and would probably be in existence if there was no parcel post. We have no parcel post in this country, and yet that mail-order business has developed. It is here now. It can not be blamed on the parcel post, because it has developed without the parcel post. It has been built up by use of the railroads and of the express companies. In all probability it will continue to use those same methods of transportation.

Usually this mail-order business is done by getting a number of orders together and sending the goods by freight in large enough quantities to get the cheap freight rates, or in large enough packages by express to get the advantage of cheap rates on the heavier packages. I do not believe that the mail-order business will make very much use of the parcel-post system, for the reason that by using the express they can collect on delivery, which they will not be able to do by the use of the parcel-post system.

Now, then, it is true that a provision for a general parcel post for large packages with a flat rate over the entire country might be to the advantage of these large stores, and I want to come now to a discussion of the particular features of this bill. The bill contains as one of its features a flat-rate system of 12 cents a pound all over the country. I am opposed to that provision for two reasons: First, it charges only by the pound—12 cents for 1 pound, 24 cents for 2 pounds, with nothing for the intermediate ounces. That is not fair; and, besides, it is not fair that the same price should be charged for transportation on a heavy package 3,000 or 4,000 miles as would be charged for its transportation a few hundred miles, and by allowing that sort of a provision it is possible that you will give an advantage to the mail-order houses. That sort of a provision is not only unfair to the Government, but unfair to the localities. When you have a certain product in a certain locality near a market you are entitled to the fair advantage which your location gives you in your home market, and no one should be allowed to bring goods in from a place 3,000 or 4,000 miles away as cheaply as you can ship them 10 miles, and in that way get an advantage over you at the expense of the Government. We would not permit the railroads to ship goods in that way; we would not permit them to ship goods from New York to San Francisco at the same price at which they ship them from New York to Philadelphia. We would not permit the express companies to ship goods in that way. They are compelled to regulate their prices to a certain extent by the distance of the haul. In small packages of light weight it is perhaps immaterial, but when you get packages of any material weight, where the weight has something to do with the expense of carrying them, then the provision of a flat rate all over the country is unfair to the Government and unfair to the local merchants in the small towns, and would, I believe, help to develop this mail-order business.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is the gentleman in favor of limiting the weight of the package to 11 pounds?

Mr. SPEER. I think so at present. Not that there is any particular merit in the 11 pounds, but that is the international weight, and I believe that our postal department now, with its present equipment, is ready to begin to do business at that weight; while if you try something different, of a much greater weight, they would not be prepared to do it, and we would have years of delay. I am opposed to delay. I am opposed to having a commission. We do not need it. There has been sufficient investigation of this. It is no new thing. It has been in use in other countries, and our Post Office Department has investigated it. They say they are willing to begin it, and have the equipment to begin it. Why should they not be allowed to begin it at once? This matter of having a commission and having it delayed is simply the last effort of those who are opposed to it to prevent its adoption.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is the gentleman in favor of the distance rate instead of the flat rate?

Mr. SPEER. Yes; I am inclined to favor the bill of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON]. If I have an opportunity I will vote for that bill, as I believe it is the best one. If I can not get that opportunity, I am willing to take anything we can get, because I believe the worst bill we can get is better than none at all, and even if it is not satisfactory it will eventually be modified. Instead of putting on too many restrictions and fixing too many rates, I believe it would be better for us to leave this matter more fully with the Post Office Department. I would be willing to let this flat rate of 12 cents stand, but with a provision that the department could arrange for zones in which goods could be transported at a less rate, to be fixed by the department, and changed from time to time as the department find the exigencies of the occasion require.

I want to say that the merchants of this country are not going to be deceived about this matter. I had a letter from a druggist at home. I thought I had it here, but I have not.

I should have liked to read it word for word as he sent it. He had signed a petition against the parcel post, but he has examined the bill, and he writes me saying that the provision as to the rural parcel post is all right; that it will be for the benefit of the local merchants, and that is what I contend. He says the other provision of a flat rate of 12 cents all over the country will be to the disadvantage of the merchants, and that is what I contend, and I say that if you will make a proper zone system and then have this rural service also, you will have something that will protect the local merchant and help develop the business of every community and build it up.

I want to say this, and I wish I had time to go into a discussion of it, I believe the great advance we have had lately in the way of controlling railroads and preventing their giving rebates, which are now acknowledged to be a thing of the past, and in preventing them from giving favored rates to certain localities, is going to break up this concentration of our business in large centers, and will cause it to be more generally distributed over the country.

I believe the provision of the bill as to rural routes is defective in this, that while it gives the right to mail a package at the central office to go out on the rural route, it does not give the man out on a rural route the proper advantage in this respect. All he can do is to mail the package to some one on his own route. Here is a central station with four or five rural routes going out from it. I say any man living on one of those rural routes ought to have the right to mail a package at these reduced rates to go in and go out so long as it does not have to be carried by rail. A man living on one route ought to have the privilege of sending a package to anyone living on another route which runs out from the same post office. The department have not asked for this emasculated service. They have asked for a complete rural service.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. There is another suggestion, and that is that even on the rural route it will be confined to fourth-class matter.

I am advised that there are only two classes of fourth-class mail matter which can be sent by the farmer, one is queen bees and the other dried fruit.

Mr. SPEER. I do not know about that. I do not understand it so.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. So that it might be of advantage to the merchant, but no reciprocal advantage to the farmer.

Mr. SPEER. I understand by this that you can mail anything that is mailable. Now, in the report of the Postmaster General for 1910, to show you that the department does not want this kind of a limited service, I want to read what is said there. What benefit would this limited service be? You do not want to send anything to a man on your own rural route. You want to send it into town to be distributed on some other route. Here is what the Postmaster General recommends. He first advocates a general parcel post and then says:

> As the preliminary step in the development of such a service it is hoped that Congress will authorize the delivery on rural routes of parcels weighing as much as 11 pounds, which is the weight limit for the international parcel post. This form of service can be conducted with little if any additional expense to the Government. It will not require the appointment of more carriers, for those already employed have the necessary equipment in the way of horses and wagons to distribute the parcel as well as the ordinary mail, which is rarely of sufficient volume to take up more than a small portion of the mail space in the carrier's wagon.

That is the sort of rural parcel-post system to have, and that is what we are not getting in this bill. It is simply a farce and a makeshift that you are going to give by the provisions of this bill. It ought to be amended so that a man out on the country road can send his parcel to the central office to have it distributed to anyone who receives the mail from the central office.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPEER. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the farmer be satisfied with anything except with a general parcel post?

Mr. SPEER. Well, I do not know about that, but we will have to take what we can get, and surely this part of it ought to be made right. I want a general parcel post also in addition to this cheaper rural service.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPEER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What does the gentleman think about the rate at which these packages should go out on the rural route?

Mr. SPEER. Well, there is a very good bill which was introduced by the gentleman from Wyoming last May for a parcel-post system on rural routes, one in which he made the low rate of 5 cents and the extreme rate on 11 pounds 25 cents. I would be glad to put that bill in here instead of the provisions as to rural service in this bill, but I say that the question of price is a matter that ought to be subject to future regulation, and that you ought to leave that as far as you can to the department, which would be much better than to hamper them too much by restrictions. I would be in favor of giving the department more power and not hamper it with too many regulations in the bill.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPEER. I will, but you are taking up my time which has almost expired.

Mr. BOWMAN. Would it not be always with the idea that the rate should be limited to not exceeding the cost?

Mr. SPEER. Yes; but that is a matter you can not tell positively about until you have the experience. Prices fixed now would necessarily be subject to future revision.

Now, then, my time is nearly gone. As to this question of condemning the express companies, I do not favor that. I see no reason why we can not have a parcel-post system of our own. The big profit is made out of handling the little packages, and that is why the express companies are fighting it. Suppose you condemn them, what do you get? Take their contracts, and what do we want the contracts for? Can not this Government make as good contracts with the railroad companies as can the express companies? If we can not we had better have a new form of government. All you will get if you condemn them is the old antiquated wagons and horses about ready to die. You will take a lot of old stuff that is out of date and worn out, that will soon be set aside, for they are now in many places using automobile trucks instead of wagons. We ought to run our parcel-post system and let the express companies run theirs, and I believe the operation of the two together will be beneficial. This is done in many countries. It is done in France and in a number of other countries where express companies operate, and the Government does not put them out of business but allows them to operate, and the competition between the express companies and the Government is, in my opinion, beneficial and helps to lessen rates.

Now, I think that the mail-order houses as a rule do not use the Government parcel post in these cases but use the express companies for the reason that they can send their goods C. O. D. by express. I believe that would be the result in this country—that these mail-order houses would not use the parcel-post system to any great extent. It would not be exactly what they want.

Why should we obligate this Government in millions and millions of dollars to condemn these express companies? It is shown that they do operate in other countries where the countries have a parcel-post system of their own and that it is not necessary to take over the express companies. We have a perfect right to establish this system without the permission of the express companies, and therefore I can see no necessity for taking them over at all. It would be much to the benefit of the express companies for us to take over their old stuff. It is said that the Government will not be able to do any business; that the express companies will do it more cheaply. Well, if the express companies can do the business more cheaply, let them do it. If that is the fact, will it not be an incentive to our Post Office Department to economize and try to conduct its affairs so that it can show that the Government can run a business of this kind as well as express companies?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPEER. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. I did not hear the gentleman as to which one of these propositions he favored.

Mr. SPEER. I shall favor the Anderson bill, because I think there should be a zone system established for general parcel post.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have paid some attention to the various bills that have been introduced for the improvement of highways in States at the expense of the National Treasury. It is a very interesting subject. As long ago as I can recollect, being the son of a father who was a Whig and a devoted follower of the gallant Harry of the West, I remember hearing them, Whigs and Democrats, when gathered around the old fireplace talk about national roads, the Whig standing for national roads and internal improvements and the Democratic politicians denouncing Clay as a fraud and opposing internal improvements and the national roads. They even put the controversy into songs on each side.

When quite a boy my father lived adjacent to the national road that lead from Cumberland, Md., to St. Louis, through Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Marshall, and Greenup. Among my earliest recollections is the stage coach, with the four horses, the driver, and the winding of the horn to announce the arrival of the mail, on that old national trail. The recollections of the boy, with the world before him, are to me, as I have no doubt they are to most old men, very pleasant. That road was never completed to St. Louis. It never was entirely completed in Indiana, except as far as Richmond, though, if I recollect right, some bridges were built and sections of the road completed as far as Marshall and Greenup, Ill. Before it was completed evil days came, and the question arose as to the maintenance of the national road. Congress refused to maintain the road, and the respective States would not maintain it. So before a great while it fell into innocuous desuetude, so far as the United States was concerned, and was granted to the respective States.

The United States parted with all title to that improvement and it is now vested in the respective States. It is a dear old road to me, and if I had the power I would construct that road from Cumberland, Md., to St. Louis, as it was originally located and in part constructed. I would make that much of a contribution to ancient recollection and to present utility. I would make the road a great pattern for all roads and highway bridges for all of the people to copy in constructing the over 2,000,000 miles of highways in the United States, and this I will by voice and vote contribute to doing.

Some 29 Members of the House have introduced bills to construct highways at the expense of the Federal Treasury. Nearly all of them provide that the States shall contribute one-half of the expense for highways within their borders. One was introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS], who represents a district through which the national road ran and I suppose still runs. It provides that the United States shall reacquire that road from the States, rebuild it, and if the States do not give it up voluntarily, then the United States shall purchase it or acquire it by condemnation. The bill also provides that when the road is constructed it shall be maintained half from the Federal Treasury and half from the State treasuries. What the States might do or refuse to do I do not know. Most of the bills introduced propose that the roads shall be constructed on the half-and-half principle for construction and maintenance.

Mr. Chairman, these 29 Members of the House, including Representative FRANCIS, got together, and after consultation went before the Committee on Agriculture and presented the following request:

To the Committee on Agriculture:

The undersigned Members, who have introduced bills on the subject of good roads, desiring to secure, as far as possible, harmony and unity of action among the friends of such legislation, have conferred, with a view to agreeing upon a bill. After careful consideration we have prepared and agreed upon the subjoined bill and requested Mr. SHACKLEFORD to introduce it on behalf of us all. We have further requested Mr. SHACKLEFORD to appear before you and respectfully bespeak for the bill early and favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

EZEKIEL S. CANDLER, Mississippi; J. THOMAS HEFLIN, Alabama; THOS. L. RUBEY, Missouri; JOHN J. WHITACRE, Ohio; JOSEPH A. TAGGART, Kansas; JOSEPH HOWELL, Utah; JAMES P. BYRNES, South Carolina; KENNETH D. MCKELLAR, Tennessee; E. W. SAUNDERS, Virginia; WILLIAM B. FRANCIS, Ohio; RICHARD W. AUSTIN, Tennessee; SCOTT FERRIS, Oklahoma; D. R. ANTHONY, Jr., Kansas; GEORGE WHITE, Ohio; WALTER L. HENSLEY, Missouri; JAMES M. COX, Ohio; GEORGE A. NEELEY, Kansas; J. J. RUSSELL, Missouri; J. H. GOEKE, Ohio; H. D. FLOOD, Virginia; BURTON L. FRENCH, Idaho; T. T. ANSBERRY, Ohio; C. C. ANDERSON, Ohio; P. P. CAMPBELL, Kansas; S. F. PROUTY, Iowa; W. C. ADAMSON, Georgia; BIRD MCGUIRE, Oklahoma; D. W. SHACKLEFORD, Missouri.

The Committee on Agriculture favorably considered and reported the bill to the House, and the House has agreed to a special rule making it in order to consider the bill as an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, which assures the consideration of the bill at this session, as the money must be appropriated to maintain the postal service.

Mr. Chairman, my time has almost expired and I can not explain the bill fully, but will, with the consent of the House, present the report of the Committee on Agriculture, which contains a copy of the bill and an explanation of its provisions.

Many of the States have very poor roads; some of the States have good roads. Indiana has 25,000 miles of the best roads in this country. [Applause.] Ohio is next with 24,000, and New York had only 12,000 in 1909, and so on.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I have only 15 minutes, but I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. CLINE. I just wanted to supplement the gentleman's remark in reference to Indiana by saying there are plenty of sections in Indiana where they haul their gravel 12 miles to build roads, and pay 50 cents a cubic yard, and that is the expenditure there.

Mr. CANNON. In my State we have 8,000 miles of roads for which we would receive annual pay under the bill.

Mr. Chairman, if nothing else can be done at this session, the bill will wake up the country and make the respective States ready to cooperate with the United States. [Applause.] Then, perhaps, it would be well to pass it. I have some statistics which I will put in the RECORD. There are 2,000,000 miles of roads in the United States. There are 118,000 miles of roads that would get something under the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture to be offered upon this Post Office appropriation bill. The cost would be about $2,300,000 the first year. If the million of miles, in round numbers, over which the rural carriers travel were in as good shape as the roads in Indiana are, and substantially in Ohio, then it would cost about $18,000,000 a year.

The roads in Illinois do not equal those in Indiana and Ohio. In Illinois it is somewhat difficult to get material near to our black land, but we have plenty of shale, and the shale brick makes the best roads. In Indiana a special tax was levied upon the land adjacent to the roads. Our roads have been improved, the country has been tiled out, and we have graded the roads, but there is a month or two in the spring when there is no bottom. The remainder of the year they are as good as any roads.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield for a correction in regard to Indiana?

Mr. CANNON. Just for a question, if the gentleman will make it short.

Mr. CULLOP. Is not the gentleman from Illinois confounding the Indiana drainage law with the road law?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. CULLOP. It is not the contiguous land that is assessed for roads, but the land of the township.

Mr. CANNON. What the rule is in Indiana now I do not know, but way back when you commenced, 35 years ago, the law then provided a tax of so much for the adjacent section and a little less for the next section, and so on.

Mr. CULLOP. That applies to the drainage land.

Mr. CANNON. What your present regulation is I do not know, but I have no doubt it is good, because you have good roads.

Mr. CULLOP. I desire to say to the gentleman they are the best of any State in the Union.

Mr. CANNON. I have just said that, and I have some pride in that, because I was born in North Carolina and grew up in Indiana, and I think I am responsible for that condition in Indiana. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, some people have constitutional scruples. Oh, they had such scruples way back as long ago as I recollect. I have not any doubt that under the general-welfare clause, under the authority to establish post roads under the power to regulate commerce among the States, we have ample power to construct the road from Cumberland, Md., to St. Louis, which I should like to see constructed, or any other road elsewhere in the United States, and appropriate therefor from the Federal Treasury. It is not the want of power that prevents action, it is the question of the policy of exercising that power and how far it is policy to exercise it. Will it ever be exercised? Yes. Some time it will be done, but it will be done gradually.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] introduced House joint resolution No. 262, that provides for a commission of three Members of the House and three Members of the Senate to investigate practically this whole matter and report to Congress. That measure has been reported favorably and is on the calendar for consideration. I shall vote for it. I am in favor of having full information, especially as to what cooperation the United States can secure from the States in construction and maintenance of roads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I will not consume further time. I wanted to talk merely about this highway question, and perhaps to the extent of 5 minutes more than the 15 minutes. [Applause.] I will extend my remarks.

The Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred House bill 22952, report the same back with the recommendation that the same be passed.

The said bill as amended will read as follows:

"A bill providing that the United States in certain cases shall make compensation for the use of highways for carrying rural mail.

"Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of this act certain highways of the several States, and the civil subdivisions thereof, are classified as follows:

"Class A shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide composed of shells, vitrified brick, or macadam graded, crowned, compacted, and maintained in such manner that it shall have continuously a firm, smooth surface, and all other roads having a road track not less than 9 feet wide of a construction equally smooth, firm, durable, and expensive, and continuously kept in proper repair.

"Class B shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide composed of burnt clay, gravel, or a proper combination of sand and clay, sand and gravel, or rock and gravel, constructed and maintained in such manner as to have continuously a firm, smooth surface.

"Class C shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, with ample side ditches, so constructed and crowned as to shed water quickly into the side ditches, continuously kept well compacted, and with a firm, smooth surface by dragging or other adequate means, so that it shall be reasonably passable for wheeled vehicles at all times.

"SEC. 2. That whenever the United States shall use any highway of any State, or civil subdivision thereof, which falls within classes A, B, or C, for the purpose of transporting rural mail, compensation for such use shall be made at the rate of $25 per annum per mile for highways of class A, $20 per annum per mile for highways of class B, and $15 per annum per mile for highways of class C. The United States shall not pay any compensation or toll for such use of such highways other than that provided for in this section, and shall pay no compensation whatever for the use of any highway not falling within classes A, B, or C.

"SEC. 3. That any question arising as to the proper classification of any road used for transporting rural mail shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"SEC. 4. That the compensation herein provided for shall be paid at the end of each fiscal year by the Treasurer of the United States upon warrants drawn upon him by the Postmaster General to the officers entitled to the custody of the funds of the respective highways entitled to compensation under this act.

"SEC. 5. That this act shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1913."

The basic principle of this bill is compensation by the Federal Government for the use of the roads traveled by the mail carriers in the star route and Rural Delivery Service.

The constitutional power of the Federal Government to construct or promote works of internal improvement has been debated from the foundation of the Republic. Heretofore the question of Federal aid to the construction or maintenance of highways has been considered from the point of view either of appropriations in aid of the construction of such works as are authorized by the States and are national in their character or of appropriations for the direct construction of roads and canals in order to "facilitate, promote, and give security to internal commerce among the several States, and to render more easy and less expensive the means and provisions for the common defense." The chief obstacle thus far in the path of appropriations in aid of road making or of road maintenance within the several States has been the indisposition on the part of the States to agree to any measure of Federal control or authority over their roads. No practicable scheme of joint operations using in part Federal and in part State money has been or is likely to be devised. One sole and responsible agency, whether State or Federal, must do the work, and all the funds appropriated for this work, whether county, State, or national, should be turned over to this agency. This is what this bill proposes to do with respect to Federal payments in compensation for use of the State roads.

The specter of Federal interference with State or local affairs has been eliminated by the form in which compensation will be made. The public is familiar with the system in vogue of compensating the railroads for the transportation of mail matter and of Government agents and agencies connected with the mail service. The aggregate of these payments in the last fiscal year amounted to about $51,000,000. Thousands of miles of exclusively State roads are in use by rural and star route carriers. At present these roads are maintained by the States, though the Federal Government enjoys their free and uninterrupted use for its mail service, whether by rural or star route carriers. No reason is perceived why the Government should not pay for use of these highways, the amount of the payment to be determined in any given instance by the character of the road traveled by Federal employees performing Federal service. For the purpose of this determination the bill divides the roads in use, or to be used, for this purpose into three classes.

Class A is the highest form of improved road in country use. For a road of this character used in the rural-delivery and star-route service it is provided that the Government shall pay at the rate of $25 per mile per year.

Class B is the next form of improved road defined in the bill, a road of high quality but not so good as that defined in class A. For this road the compensation fixed is at the rate of $20 per mile per year.

Class C comprehends the ordinary dirt roads of the country, and for these roads the prescribed compensation is at the rate of $15 per mile per year.

Payments are to be made at the end of each year to the appropriate custodian of the road funds, on the warrant of the Postmaster General. No payment will be made for a road not falling within one of the prescribed classes, and as the determination of the proper character of the road used will be at all times in the hands of the agents of the Federal Government, the interests of the Government in this respect will be adequately conserved. If the road is not maintained to the prescribed standard, the road authorities will not be entitled to receive compensation. If it is maintained to the standard for a portion of the year, then the compensation will be paid pro rata. The most zealous and tenacious advocate of State rights will be unable to find in this bill any encroachment upon those rights. The States will maintain and control their highways, and the Federal Government will pay for using them, provided that they are adequately maintained in the prescribed condition. If the maintenance of State roads is a function of the States, that function will not be trenched upon or in anywise impaired by this bill. The States will continue in the sole and exclusive control of the State highways, and will be under no compulsion to receive the payments contemplated for their use. It is hardly necessary to enlarge upon the benefits to the whole public that will follow upon the general improvement of the highways in the several States. In the matter of good roads, this country lags behind the older countries of the civilized world. In part this is due to the fact that this country is the only one of the great powers that makes no national contribution either to the construction or to the maintenance of public roads. For this our dual system of government is largely responsible, since this duality has made it difficult to furnish this aid in such a manner as to reconcile the conflicting rights and interests of the States and the Nation.

It is believed that the measure proposed is not only no infraction of the Constitution but is in harmony with its general purpose. The number of miles of State roads now traveled by the rural and star-route carriers is approximately 1,179,000. The mileage in class A is 35,000 miles, in class B, 83,000 miles, and in class C, 1,061,000 miles. According to the prescribed scheme of payments the amount per year that this bill will carry on the above basis, should payments be made for the entire mileage, will be $18,450,000. But it must be borne in mind that only a small proportion of this aggregate mileage is in condition to receive immediate compensation.

The improved roads, totaling 118,000 miles, may be considered as ready to comply with the requirements of the bill and receive compensation, but the aggregate payments on this account will be only $2,535,000 per year. A very large proportion of the mileage of dirt roads will require much work at the hands of the local authorities before any claim for compensation can be presented. Hence it is believed that for the first year the payments on this account will be comparatively small, the exact amount required being impossible of estimate. In proportion as the mileage of the rural and star routes increases and dirt roads are improved so as to fall within class A, class B, or class C, the payments under this bill will increase, but the increase will be a legitimate and natural evolution. The inevitable effect of this measure will be not only an immediate improvement of the roads of all the States but a stimulus to road construction in every direction.

The tendency of road building hereafter will be in the direction of a steadily progressive change on the character of the State roads, the dirt roads being transformed into improved roads as rapidly as possible, so as to entitle the local communities to receive the large tolls contemplated for roads of the latter description. The universality of the benefit of this measure is one of its striking features of merit. It will touch every State and practically every community. Wherever a rural or a star route runs, however remote that route many be from the great centers of trade and commerce, the stimulating effect of this bill upon road improvement will be proportionately felt. So far from stifling or impeding the spirit of local improvement and development, this measure of Federal compensation for roads actually used will energize that spirit, since the payments provided will swell the local contributions into a working total. On the whole, it is submitted that the bill is meritorious in its purpose and constitutional in its character.

This measure is the composite production in conference of a number of members who have heretofore shown their interest in the subject of national aid to roads by the introduction of bills on this subject. At the time this measure was introduced in the House, Mr. SHACKLEFORD, of Missouri, made the following statement as a part of his remarks:

Mr. Speaker, those participating in the conference signed the following document:

To the Committee on Agriculture:

The undersigned Members, who have introduced bills on the subject of good roads, desiring to secure, as far as possible, harmony and unity of action among the friends of such legislation, have conferred with a view to agreeing upon a bill. After careful consideration we have prepared and agreed upon the subjoined bill and requested Mr. SHACKLEFORD to introduce it on behalf of us all. We have further requested Mr. SHACKLEFORD to appear before you and respectfully bespeak for the bill early and favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

EZEKIEL S. CANDLER, Mississippi; J. THOMAS HEFLIN, Alabama; THOS. L. RUBEY, Missouri; JOHN J. WHITACRE, Ohio; JOSEPH A. TAGGART, Kansas, JOSEPH HOWELL, Utah; JAMES F. BYRNES, South Carolina; KENNETH D. MCKELLAR, Tennessee; E. W. SAUNDERS, Virginia; WILLIAM B. FRANCIS, Ohio; RICHARD W. AUSTIN, Tennessee; SCOTT FERRIS, Oklahoma; D. R. ANTHONY, Jr., Kansas; GEORGE WHITE, Ohio; WALTER L. HENSLEY, Missouri; JAMES M. COX, Ohio; GEORGE A. NEELEY, Kansas; J. J. RUSSELL, Missouri; J. H. GOEKE, Ohio; H. D. FLOOD, Virginia; BURTON L. FRENCH, Idaho; T. T. ANSBERRY, Ohio; C. C. ANDERSON, Ohio; P. P. CAMPBELL, Kansas; S. F. PROUTY, Iowa; W. C. ADAMSON, Georgia; BIRD MCGUIRE, Oklahoma; D. W. SHACKLEFORD, Missouri.

After its reference to the Committee on Agriculture, the bill was referred to a subcommittee as follows: Mr. RUBEY, Mr. LEVER, Mr. BEALL of Texas, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. HANNA.

After careful consideration, the subcommittee approvingly reported the measure to the full committee. The examination of the full committee confirmed the indorsement of the subcommittee, and the bill was ordered to be reported with favorable recommendation.

The figures as to the mileage of the improved roads were obtained from the Agricultural Department, while the figures as to the roads traveled by the star route and rural route carriers were furnished by the Post Office Department. In this connection, the statement afforded by the latter department is reproduced for the information of the House:

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] 40 minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, one of the greatest problems which confronts the American people to-day, demanding their immediate attention and prompt action, is the construction of a system of hard roads throughout the country. When we consider that we have, in round numbers, 2,200,000 miles of country roads and that less than 200,000 miles of these roads are improved, and when we further consider that the average haul from the farm to the market is 9.4 miles, and that the average cost per ton is 23 cents a mile, we are compelled to admit that the farmers of this country have been sadly neglected in the past. The deplorable condition of transportation over our roads is revealed when we consider that it costs the farmer 1.6 cents more to haul a bushel of wheat 9.4 miles to market than it does to ship it from New York to Liverpool, 3,100 miles away.

Prior to the Civil War agriculture was the chief occupation of the people, and the great majority of them lived in the country. In 1790 only 3.4 per cent of the population lived in cities, and in 1850, 87½ per cent lived on farms. It was the fixed policy of this country for the first half century and more to give national aid to the construction of good roads throughout the States. Washington in his first annual message to Congress recommended that prompt attention be given to the construction of post roads, and throughout his eight years as Chief Magistrate of the Nation he steadily pursued the same policy. Madison, Monroe, and John Quincy Adams in their messages to Congress advocated the same doctrine. The old Cumberland Road from the Potomac to the Ohio was constructed by the Government, and Congress has repeatedly set apart a certain per cent of the sale of public lands and donated the same to the different States for the construction of public roads. The Constitution gives Congress the power to establish post offices and post roads, to regulate commerce, and promote the common welfare. The power is ample and has never been questioned until recent years, and only by those who are opposed to the expenditure of public money for the benefit of the common people, and in most instances they have invoked the question of expediency instead of denying the constitutional power. Since the Civil War corporations have been enthroned in high places and have strenuously striven to control legislation for the benefit of the few. In 1892 Mr. William H. Ketler estimated that out of the 784,647,308.77 acres of public lands which had been disposed of by the Government, fully 350,000,000 acres had been granted to speculators and corporations. The railroads received land grants amounting to about 200,000,000 acres, a perfect empire. Besides land grants, the Pacific railways received aid from the Government in the way of an advancement of $64,000,000 in bonds, and thereafter the United States paid more than $50,000,000 interest on these bonds. It was brought out in the Stanley Investigation Committee of the United States Steel Corporation a few days ago that the 23 directors of that trust control more than 55 per cent of the railroad property of the country, thereby giving them the power to shape the policy of the entire railroad business of the United States. The aggregate value of the railroads is fixed approximately at $18,000,000,000, and the United States Steel Corporation is said to control more than $10,000,000,000 of this wealth.

The 23 directors of this company are on the directorate boards of banks, insurance companies, express companies, and various other industrial corporations, with an aggregate capitalization of $7,388,099,416. These men sit on the boards of directors or sit as officers of other trusts, banks, and insurance companies having a capital, surplus, deposit, and undivided profits aggregating $3,314,811,178; in industrial corporations having an aggregate capital and bonded indebtedness of $2,803,509,348, aggregating a grand total of more than $30,000,000,000. Of these 23 men George F. Baker holds the greatest number of offices or memberships. He is a director in industrial corporations valued at more than $2,000,000, railroads at more than $1,000,000,000, and banks with a capital of more than $1,500,000,000. The other 22 gentlemen are in industrial corporations with a capital of more than $1,000,000,000. Among the most prominent of whom are J. Pierpont Morgan, J. Pierpont Morgan, jr., William E. Cory, H. C. Frick, W. H. Moore, George W. Perkins, Norman B. Ream, Daniel G. Ried, P. A. B. Widener, Percival Roberts, jr., and E. C. Converse. It has been estimated that the valuation of all the wealth in this country is fixed at about $125,000,000,000. It will thus be seen that 23 men control more than one-fourth of the entire wealth of the country, all of which has come about by legislation granting special privileges to corporations.

Mr. Chairman, in the light of these aggregations of wealth in the hands of the few, brought about by special legislation, is it not time for us to call a halt? The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has given this question careful consideration. It has decided to recommend for your consideration a policy of "back to the farm," as it was in the days of our forefathers, with special attention given to agriculture and the construction of good roads. In the bill which we have reported to this House will be found a provision, as an amendment, suggested by Congressman SHACKLEFORD, of Missouri, for the purpose of giving national aid to the construction and maintenance of public highways, which is as follows:

That for the purposes of this act certain highways of the several States, and the civil subdivisions thereof, are classified as follows:

Class A shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide, composed of shells, vitrified brick, or macadam graded, crowned, compacted, and maintained in such manner that it shall have continuously a firm, smooth surface, and all other roads having a road track not less than 9 feet wide of a construction equally smooth, firm, durable, and expensive, and continuously kept in proper repair.

Class B shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide, composed of burnt clay, gravel, or a proper combination of sand and clay, sand and gravel, or rock and gravel, constructed and maintained in such manner as to have continuously a firm, smooth surface.

Class C shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, with ample side ditches, so constructed and crowned as to shed water quickly into the side ditches, continuously kept well compacted and with a firm, smooth surface by dragging or other adequate means, so that it shall be reasonably passable for wheeled vehicles at all times.

SEC. 2. That whenever the United States shall use any highway of any State, or civil subdivision thereof, which falls within classes A, B, or C, for the purpose of transporting rural mail, compensation for such use shall be made at the rate of $25 per annum per mile for highways of class A, $20 per annum per mile for highways of class B, and $15 per annum per mile for highways of class C. The United States shall not pay any compensation or toll for such use of such highways other than that provided for in this section, and shall pay no compensation whatever for the use of any highway not falling within classes A, B, or C.

SEC. 3. That any question arising as to the proper classification of any road used for transporting rural mail shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 4. That the compensation herein provided for shall be paid at the end of each fiscal year by the Treasurer of the United States upon warrants drawn upon him by the Postmaster General to the officers entitled to the custody of the funds of the respective highways entitled to compensation under this act.

SEC. 5. That this act shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1913.

The roads are divided into three grades, namely, A, B, and C grades. The roads of grade A are the highest type and best improved roads in the country and will receive under the provisions of this bill the sum of $25 per mile annually. They are the hard-finished roads with a level and smooth surface. The roads which are built of clay and sand, or clay and gravel, or clay and rock and gravel are placed in grade B and are to receive from the Government $20 annually per mile. The dirt road which has been improved by leveling it up and giving it an oval surface so that it will naturally drain itself into the side ditches and which is ready for further improvements by adding gravel or macadam is denominated grade C. All of these roads are required to be not less than a mile in length and 9 feet wide, except grade C. While these amounts will not go very far in the construction of hard roads, in view of the fact that the average dirt and sand or clay and gravel roads cost $723 per mile, and the average cost of making hard roads is more than $10,000 per mile, yet aided by the States, counties, townships, or roads districts, we may reasonably expect some good results in the near future. It will be a beginning, at least, and that is what we most desire now.

The United States is now engaged in the delivery of rural mails in every State in the Union. She has the necessity of using the public highways in this service and it is just as reasonable to contend that she ought to pay for the use of these roads and help to construct and keep them up as it is to contend that she ought to keep up the navigable rivers and harbors of the country. It will not do to say that because the country people use these roads for transportation of their products that they should construct and maintain the roads; the same logic would apply to the use of navigable streams for transportation of mails; they are also used by the merchant and middle man for the transportation of commerce.

If we should adopt either the parcel post or the postal express, the necessity for good roads will be much increased, and the use of the public roads by the United States for this purpose and for rural route delivery of the mails will become all the more important. It will not do to interpose the selfish plea that the farmer will get the greatest benefit from national aid in order to defeat this most important enterprise. The same argument can be used against labor going to the city for work, thereby increasing the population, and making room for larger business enterprises. As the business of the city increases the value of all property therein increases in proportion. It is not alone what the owner of property does to increase its value, but it is the growth of the city and its importance as a business and commercial center that adds the greatest value to the real estate of the city.

Mr. Chairman, the influences which have forced America to the front so rapidly in recent years are those improvements which have brought the people closer together. The establishment of the telegraph system, the telephone system, the railroad system, and the airship system have annihilated space and time by bringing the people of distant parts of the country face to face with each other, thereby lightening their burdens and establishing a closer union among them. What these great improvements have done for the people will be duplicated by the establishment of a system of good roads, with this difference I trust and verily believe. The income and profits derived from good roads will inure to the benefit of the common people as well as to the rich, while the income from the public utilities referred to have been appropriated and will continue to be appropriated by the rich corporations for their own use and benefit.

It is a deplorable fact that America has the poorest system of roads of any of the great civilized powers in the world, with the exception, perhaps, of Russia, and yet she is the richest and most intelligent of all. It has been estimated by scientific investigation that the average cost per ton over hard roads from the farm to the market ought not to exceed 8 cents a mile. In England, France, and Germany, where the roads are highly improved, it does not cost that much. In some places where the roads have reached a state of high-grade improvement the cost per ton-mile does not exceed 6 cents, and in some instances it runs as low as 5 cents per ton-mile. However, the general average, taking the roads as a whole, is about 10 cents per ton-mile. They use wagons with tires from 4 to 6 inches wide, which become road builders instead of road destroyers. They can haul from 3 to 6 tons a load with two horses. While in America, with our bad dirt roads so soft and muddy one-fourth of the year, we are unable to do any teaming until they dry out, and then they are left with such a rough and uneven surface that our loads are much reduced in size in consequence thereof.

In 1906 the Bureau of Statistics of the Agricultural Department collected data from 1,894 counties in this country, and from that made an estimate that the average distance from the farm to the nearest market is 9.4 miles, and that the average cost per ton to the farmer for hauling his farm products from the farm to the market is 23 cents a mile. The Bureau of Commerce and Labor has estimated that there are about 900,000,000 tons of freight originating on the various railroads annually; 32 per cent of this comes from the farm, forest, and miscellaneous sources, which amounts to 275,000,000 tons. If we estimate that 200,000,000 tons of this amount are hauled over the country roads at an average distance of 9.4 miles, and at a cost of 23 cents a ton-mile, we have a cost of $432,400,000 for road transportation alone. This does not include that vast amount of freight which is hauled to the rivers, canals, wharves, and docks from the farm for shipment. Neither does it include the millions of tons which are hauled back and forth from the mills to the farms, back and forth from the mines and quarries to the farm, and the supplies for the farm which are hauled from the market to the farm, all of which must be equal to the amount hauled to the railroad, which will total up in round numbers to about $1,000,000,000. If a system of good roads would reduce this cost to about 10 cents per ton-mile, as it is to-day in England, France, and Germany, or if it would reduce it to 8 cents per ton-mile, as is estimated by scientific experiment, the farmers would save more than $500,000,000 annually. On the old Cumberland Pike road it cost 17 cents per ton-mile, with a good profit. In 1896 it was estimated by the United States authorities that the cost was then 25 cents per ton-mile, but since that time much improvements have been added to the roads, and the cost has been reduced to 23 cents per ton-mile. I insert the table which was compiled by the Bureau of Statistics of the Agricultural Department, which is as follows.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said by some Members of this House, mostly Members representing city districts, that the farmers ought to build their own roads, because they will derive all the benefit therefrom by an increase in the price of their lands. Such statements are certainly prompted by prejudice of the city against the country, and without a due consideration of the great advantages which the city will receive by the establishment of a system of good roads. I challenge the accuracy of such statements, Mr. Chairman, and assert that the construction of a system of hard roads in America will not only increase the value of the farm but it will increase the value of every lot in every city throughout the land. Who ever heard of town property being worth anything without a prosperous country surrounding it for support? Who ever heard of a city thriving and becoming a great industrial and social center unless it had a country back of it for support? And who ever heard of a town growing to any size without highways of easy approach, such as railroads, rivers, and good country roads? A stream can rise no higher than the capacity of its feeders, and the same is true of a city. Its capacity in wealth and influence is dependent upon the capacity of the country supporting it. I assert, Mr. Chairman, with all the confidence of truth, that if we establish a system of hard roads in this country, it will be the means of building up great, strong, central cities in the country of commanding commercial importance, and will give an internal improvement which can come about in no other way. England, France, Germany, Spain, and Holland have constructed public highways at the expense of the Government. They have cut down the hills, leveled up the low places, and finished their roads with a smooth, hard surface, so that they practically have level roads from the country town to the city. This being the case, the town of the old country is regarded as a center, whether it be a little Iberian village or a great city like Rome.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. Have not they had centuries in which to build these roads? Have not they had millions of people to help them build them, and is not this a new country, and is it not developing as fast as any of the old countries did from the beginning of civilized times down to the present?

Mr. FOWLER. We want to develop faster than the old countries did. We are a faster people than they are; we are the greatest nation on earth, with the greatest amount of wealth and with the greatest amount of energy and intellect of any people on the globe. Nothing, in my opinion, will aid us more in our efforts for rapid development than a system of good roads.

Mr. LOBECK. Have we not had the flower of Europe to help us out?

Mr. FOWLER. We have had not only the flower of Europe, but we have had the flower from all other civilized countries in the world coming here to mix and mingle with our blood, which has made us glorious and prosperous. [Applause.]

Mr. LOBECK. That has made flowers of us.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, in 1850 only 12½ per cent of the population of our country lived in cities, now more than one-half of our people are crowded in the incorporated cities, the exact per cent being 53.6. Living in cities of 2,500 and more, the per cent is 46.3. I know a family of five young men, whose parents and their ancestors on both sides had always been farmers, but all of these boys, long before they reached manhood, left the farm and took up other occupations. Man is a social being, and without good society, good schools, and good churches he becomes restless in this age of civilization and seeks relief. He would rather economize and often suffer for the necessaries of life than be away from these great social, intellectual, and moral uplifting influences. The tide will continue to flow from the country to the city until something is done to give the country people those conveniences which are enjoyed in the city. Nothing, in my opinion, will be a greater stride in this direction than the construction of good roads everywhere. This would give the farmer an opportunity to reach the market readily and regularly, thereby giving him an opportunity to place the products of the farm on the market whenever there is a demand for them, instead of being forced to sell whenever the roads will permit haulage thereon. The basis of the sale now is not regulated by the demand for the product, but by the condition of the roads, whether the market is bare or glutted. This regularity would have a tendency to maintain steady prices and reduce the high cost of living, a thing most desirable nowadays.

An examination of the statistics of counties with improved roads will almost invariably reveal that the population has increased, whereas the counties with but little or no improvements of public roads will reveal that the population has decreased decidedly. I am informed by the Bureau of Statistics that 25 counties were selected at random, with an average road improvement of 1.5 per cent, and that the census shows that in 10 years, from 1890 to 1900, the population had decreased 3,112 for each of these counties; I am also informed by the same authority that 25 other counties, with an average of 40 per cent road improvements, the population increased 31,095 to the county, during the same period.

I have no doubt but that good roads have their bearing upon the question of illiteracy. It is noticeable that in the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Ohio, and Indiana, with 35 per cent of their roads improved, 77 per cent of the children enrolled attended school regularly, while in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Georgia, and South Dakota, with only 1.5 per cent of their roads improved, the children enrolled who attended school regularly were only 59 per cent. Data from the Twelfth Census show that in four States, with a population of 7,000,000 people, 375,000 white illiterates were born of native parents. These States are conspicuous for their bad roads; whereas four other States with comparatively good improved roads and having a population of more than 6,000,000, there were only 20,000 illiterates. In many States where there are good roads the children of whole townships are placed in one school, giving an opportunity to establish a systematic graded school, which certainly is advisable and much more satisfactory. Children can not attend school regularly over wet, muddy roads, and that community with such roads can not hope to attain as high a standard of education as those where the roads are good.

The census of 1900 shows 850,000,000 acres of farm lands, improved and unimproved. There are nearly 425,000,000 acres unimproved. The poor quality of the soil and the distance from market keep much of this territory out of cultivation, but that a system of good roads would place a large area under cultivation and materially increase the output of the farm is the opinion of all close students of economics.

The question of good roads is now being agitated everywhere. Good roads congresses and good roads organizations of various denominations exist in every State in the Union. The good women of Illinois have a good roads congress organization, and they are doing much good in this direction. They held a three-days' convention during the early part of this month at Chicago for the purpose of discussing this vital question. Never before in the history of the country since I can recollect has there been such a universal awakening upon this subject. The school children are debating the question and writing essays upon it. Every State in the Union is doing some work in this direction. Indiana, with 25,000 miles of improved roads, takes the lead, followed by Ohio with 24,000 miles, New York with 12,000 miles, Wisconsin with 10,000 miles, Kentucky with 10,000 miles, Illinois with nearly 9,000 miles, California with 8,500 miles, and Massachusetts with 8,400 miles. I am sorry to say that the average improvement is only 8.66 per cent.

In Illinois we are furnished with limestone macadam, crushed at Chester State Penitentiary, free for hard-road building, and all that it costs is the cost of transportation. In the southern part of the State the watchword is to construct a piece of some hard road, however short, annually in every township.

I submit the following tables showing per cent of improvements in each State and the average cost per mile of improved roads:

[1] This includes gravel roads.

These tables reveal that this work is progressing very slowly, and there is a good reason for it. It is too big a proposition for any community to undertake. It is not an individual undertaking, but, on the other hand, it is an undertaking of collective forces and means. The digging of the Panama Canal was too big a proposition for the individual. It was too big a proposition for a company. Several companies undertook it at different times, but all of them failed and gave up the job as being too big. Some of them failed in disgrace, I am sorry to say. It took America, with her wealth, with her ingenuity and indomitable will power, to accomplish that vast undertaking. What has been done for the Panama Canal can be done for the public roads of this country and place them first among the nations of the world, thereby giving the citizen of the country the same advantages for happiness and prosperity as is enjoyed by the citizen of the populous cities, but it can not be done by the farmer alone, it is too expensive, and necessarily will require the aid of both the State and the Nation. The time is ripe for it, the conditions of the country demand it; the farmers stand in sore need of it, and why not consent to it as freely and unbegrudgingly as we did the digging of the Panama Canal? It will bring more universal and lasting good to the people of this country than any other proposition now before the American people.

Mr. FORNES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. FORNES. We are all proud of the strength of this Nation to build the Panama Canal, to set an example of what the enterprise of America can do as compared with other nations that have failed in such great undertakings. But I wish to remind the gentleman that my own State, which is now appropriating $200,000,000 out of its own treasury to enlarge the Erie Canal, could have undertaken that work and carried it to a successful conclusion. I also want to ask the gentleman, who speaks in such glowing terms of the great progress that Illinois has made in building its own roads, whether he thinks it is quite fair for the State of Illinois to spend so much money, when perhaps the State of Iowa or some other State is not spending any, and then Illinois have to join in and help fill the National Treasury in order that the delinquent States shall get the benefit, the same as the citizens of Illinois are giving to their own State?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know of any State in the Union but what is making an effort for the purpose of building some kind of good roads; but I do say to the gentlemen from New York that I believe it is just as right in good morals and in good civilization for the Nation to undertake to help build hard roads as it is for the Nation to improve the rivers and harbors of this country or to dig the Panama Canal. [Applause.] The gentleman boasts that his State alone could have constructed the Panama Canal, and I grant that it could. Mr. Morgan himself could have done it, but he did not have the courage to do it. He wanted to do it if it had millions in it for him, but he did not offer to do it because he knew the American people would not let him make millions out of it. That great thoroughfare is for the civilization of the world, and ultimately to bring it under a republican form of government. [Applause.]

Mr. FORNES. Will the gentleman yield for another explanation?

Mr. FOWLER. I will yield to the gentleman for a short question.

Mr. FORNES. Does the gentleman mean to infer that the State of New York, in spending $200,000,000 of its own money to enlarge the Erie Canal, is doing it dishonestly?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not imputing anything but honestly to any great enterprising State or municipality. I assume that the people are honest everywhere until they are shown to be to the contrary. I am glad to know that New York is so liberal with her money in aid of constructing and maintaining her canals.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I can not yield very much, for I want to cover two other subjects.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to ask the gentleman one short question. Does the gentleman think a hard dirt road in Illinois would come within the definition here that requires a road to be firm and smooth at all times? I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to say that those Illinois country roads were bottomless in wet weather. Is it not a fact that you will not get any money at all for those roads?

Mr. FOWLER. "At all times" would, if strictly construed, exclude every road from the bill, and there would not be a mile of road, under this construction, which would come within the meaning of these words. Such words, "at all times," must receive a reasonable construction, and that is what the courts would do whenever it is put up to the court, I apprehend.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is there not danger that the States with the macadamized roads would get all the money, and the States with dirt roads would get none?

Mr. FOWLER. No, Mr. Chairman; that construction is a strained construction, because the stone road gets out of fix and repair just as quick as the dirt road, and it is harder to repair than the dirt road, because the material is not present on the ground and requires a journey of some distance for it in the majority of cases.

Mr. Chairman, a system of good roads in the country will give the people quick and easy communication with one another and will reduce the high cost of living. In 1910 we raised in this country $9,000,000,000 worth of farm products. It is fair to estimate that the farmer kept about one-third, or $3,000,000,000, of it for his own consumption. The other two-thirds, or $6,000,000,000, had to find its way from the farm to the market over our horrible roads.

It is estimated that this $6,000,000,000 worth of farm products cost the consumer the enormous sum of $13,000,000,000 by the time it reached him. In other words, the consumer paid for transportation and middleman's profits the sum of $7,000,000,000, or $1,000,000,000 more than the farmer received for his entire crop. It is also estimated that the total output of the factory for the same year amounted to more than $20,670,000,000. This estimate only includes the cost of the material and the cost of labor necessary to turn out the finished product. If we should add to this the same per cent for transportation and middleman's profits as was done to the products of the farm it will give us the sum which the consumer was compelled to pay, $44,785,000,000. Take from this sum the original cost of material and cost of labor, which we have seen was $20,670,000,000, and we have the sum of $24,115,000,000 for transportation and the middleman's profit. Add to this the $7,000,000,000 for cost of transportation and profits on farm products and we have a total of $31,115,000,000 as the price which the consumer paid for transportation and middleman's profits for one year.

If it be said that this estimate is too high, I call the attention of the House that the estimate for transportation and middleman's profits on farm products was made by Mr. B. F. Yoakum, chairman of the board of directors of the Frisco lines. I have made the estimate on the finished product myself, based on the same per cent made by him on farm products. If it should be contended that my estimate is too high on the finished product, I call the attention of the House that Charles M. Schwab, on the 15th day of May, 1899, in a letter to Mr. H. C. Frick, relative to the production of steel rails, said:

> You know we can make rails for less than $12 per ton, leaving a nice margin on foreign business. Besides this, foreign costs are going to increase year by year, because they have not the raw materials, while ours is going to decrease. The result of all this is that we will be able to sell our surplus abroad, run our works full all the time, and get the best practice and costs in this way.

Mr. Schwab incorporated this letter in his evidence before the Ways and Means Committee on November 27, 1908, and made it a part of his testimony, page 1628 of the hearings. It is well known that steel rails have been selling for $28 to $32 for many years, giving to the corporation for transportation and profits a sum two and a half times the cost of production. Wheat binders are sold to the farmer for $140 to $150, while as a matter of fact the cost of production is less than $30 each, leaving for transportation and profits a sum more than five time the original cost. If these are fair samples of profits and cost of transportation, it is a most deplorable condition, and shows to what extent the consumer is being daily exploited. Our only hope to reduce the high cost of living is to improve the roads to reduce the cost of transportation and prosecute the trusts until they dissolve and restore competition in the commercial world, thereby resulting in a reduction of the robber profits. It will take this to give any kind of relief to the consumer, and the proper thing for us to do is to make a bold beginning with a bill that will give the greatest measure of relief possible with the least possible damage to the business of the country.

Good roads would give an opportunity to put the products of the farm on the market regularly, and there is a great necessity for that. Because if you put the whole crop of the country on the market at one time, all the wheat, all the corn, all the potatoes, or all of any other crop, the market will become congested and the farmer will get an inadequate price for his stuff. It is then hoarded up by the middleman to keep and deal out to the consumer under the plea of inadequate supply. In this way the middleman puts up the price at pleasure and reaps all the profits, while the farmer barely gets enough to live on. The big moneyed middleman is to blame for the high cost of living.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. I do not understand clearly from the gentleman's discussion whether he is in favor of this proposition in the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman need not be uneasy about that. I have no hesitancy in declaring myself unalterably in favor of any measure which will lighten the burdens of that class of people whose labor satisfies the hunger of the world. I will vote for any bill which seeks relief to them. I care not what its terms are. I am in favor of a beginning. [Applause.]

Mr. CLINE. I understood the gentleman was in favor of the Government building the roads.

Mr. FOWLER. No; I tried to make myself clear on that point. The Government, State, county, township, or road district ought to unite and go hand in hand in this work.

Mr. CLINE. Would you expect to have the Government have any control over or title in the road?

Mr. FOWLER. No; the Government ought not to have any control over or title in the roads or interest in them. The Government to-day is using the roads for the purpose of delivering the mail on the rural and star routes to the people in the country and pays nothing for such use. I was going to come to that proposition. It is just as reasonable for the Government to pay for the use of the roads over which it delivers the mails as it is to pay for the steel cars that it carries the mail in on the railroads. This bill does not contemplate Government construction of roads. It provides that the Government should pay for the use of certain improved roads.

Mr. CLINE. I am not taking any exception to the gentleman's position, but I wanted to know what his relationship was to the subject and how it was to be distributed in harmony with the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from Indiana asked the question. While the bill is not just what I would like to have, yet I will vote for it, and I am not going to vote for any amendment offered by the enemies of the bill in order to kill it. I am for the bill. Let us pass it and make it the law. [Applause.]

PARCEL POST OR POSTAL EXPRESS.

Mr. Chairman, there is another question which I desire to call the attention of the House to, and that is the transportation of the small package. There are two propositions before Congress dealing with this subject; one is known as the parcel post and the other is known as the postal express. The small parcel up to the weight of 4 pounds is now carried through the mails at a flat rate of 16 cents per pound—however, only certain kinds of parcels enjoy this privilege—and this provision of the law applies to citizens of this country. Small packages of the weight of 11 pounds are carried through the mails for 12 cents a pound for the benefit only of foreigners residing in this country. The argument is put up by some that we ought to change this law so that we would carry the small package for citizens of our country on the same terms as we do for foreigners. This is the contention of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and a provision for such change is incorporated in the bill now before the House, which is known as the annual appropriation bill for the Post Office Department. This bill also provides for a rural route parcel-post system, which begins and terminates on the rural routes, on the following terms:

> That postage shall be paid on all articles, parcels, or packages entitled to transportations under the provisions of this act as matter of the fourth class on rural mail delivery routes only at the following rates: One cent for each 2 ounces or less, 2 cents for more than 2 ounces but not more than 4 ounces, 3 cents for more than 4 ounces but not more than 8 ounces, 4 cents for more than 8 ounces but not more than 12 ounces, 5 cents for more than 12 ounces but not more than a pound, and 2 cents per pound for each additional pound or fraction thereof up to and including a total of 11 pounds. That the Postmaster General shall make all rules and regulations necessary and not inconsistent with law to the proper execution of this act.

The transportation of the small package has given the people of all civilized countries much concern, many of which have worked out the problem and now have fixed and definite rules and laws regulating the same, but in our country but little has been done for the relief of the people. We have been left to the mercy of the railroad and express companies to establish rules favorable to themselves and most unfavorable to the people. High express rates, reaching far into the dark fields of robbery are extorted from the people annually by the express companies. The railroads have ceased, practically, to carry any package under 100 pounds, and have turned all of this class of business over to the express companies, with the understanding that the express company will get 52½ per cent of the express charges and the railroads will get 47½ per cent for transportation charges. A nice game, indeed, Mr. Chairman. Now, in my judgment, the thing for us to do is to look into this matter carefully and frame a law broad enough to give substantial relief, one which will move the product of the farm on equal terms with the product of the factory. I have examined all of the bills dealing with parcel post, and I lay down this proposition without fear of being successfully challenged by any Member of this House: That there is not now any bill before this House which is broad enough to move the products of the farm in small parcels either to the consumer or to the markets. Why? Because all of them deal with fourth-class matter alone, and under the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department only certain articles can be transported through the mails as fourth-class matter. Here is the list of fourth-class matter, prepared and sent out by the Post Office Department to regulate this question, and nothing which does not fall within its provisions can be admitted to the mails as fourth-class matter.

Mr. Chairman, under these regulations nothing raised on the farm can be carried in the mails as fourth-class matter except dried fruits, queen bees, and cut flowers. The third-class matter adds but little to the list, only a few other things, such as samples of grain and bulbs for the garden. None of these bills undertake to change the law so that articles from the farm may be carried through the mails on like terms with articles from the factory.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman is mistaken about that. There are four classes of mail matter—first class for letters, second class for newspapers and publications of that sort, third class for bound books, and the fourth class is merchandise.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; but it does not include anything from the farm, except queen bees, dried fruits, and cut flowers, and that is all. I am speaking now of the regulations that the Post Office Department has established. I grant now that the matter is under the Post Office Department as an administrative question, to be regulated by that department under existing laws.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Everything that the department under the law and its rules and regulations would hold to be merchandise could pass as fourth-class matter.

Mr. FOWLER. Here is the list, and I am going to print it in my speech in the RECORD. The only things it takes in from the farm are queen bees, cut flowers, and dried fruits.

Mr. LOBECK. And Christmas presents?

Mr. FOWLER. No; it does not take in Christmas presents from the farm, unless they should be queen bees, dried fruit, or cut flowers.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Suppose the department were to say that potatoes and onions and apples and things of that sort, which are merchandise and are the products of the farm, could under the regulations go through, would they not have the right to do it?

Mr. FOWLER. The authority of the Post Office Department to make rules is prescribed by the law.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Almost every farm product that is not perishable in its nature could pass through the mail.

Mr. FOWLER. That may be true, but as it stands to-day, under the regulations established by the Post Office Department, there is not a parcel-post bill before this Congress that would move anything from the farm to the consumer or to the market except the articles mentioned. I grant they might make a reclassification, but the existing law would govern whatever classification might be proposed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, on the point of the colloquy between the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Illinois I find on investigation that the power of the Postmaster General to determine classifications under the fourth class goes back to a statute. The statute prescribes that nothing of a fourth-class character shall be receivable as such unless it be of a character that it may go in the mail bag without injury to itself, without injury to anything else in the mail bag, and without injury to the bag itself. From that statute the Postmaster General has worked out the classifications that my friend has read. Obviously butter and eggs and dressed poultry and the products of the farm could not be put in a mail bag and carried with other matter, and the existing statute restricts the mailing privilege to matter as I have described it which may be put in the mail bag without injury to itself, the bag, or the other contents. So the gentleman from Illinois, in my judgment, is entirely correct in asserting that nothing from the farm can be carried under these bills.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Why, of course, under the present rules and regulations.

Mr. LEWIS. And statutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Rules and regulations made in pursuance of the statutes. The statutes give the power to the Post Office Department to make rules and regulations that have the force and effect of statutes in matters of that sort. It is very obvious that you could not mix in mail bags eggs and chickens and butter. A man of common sense would not undertake to do it, but the power exists under the statute to make regulations to make any shipment of anything that is not perishable in its nature and might be classified by the department as fourth-class matter, and, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] suggests to me, they might provide separate pouches for these various things.

Mr. FOWLER. Here is a list of fourth-class matter, taken from the Postal Guide, which I submit in support of my contention:

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to commend the devotion which the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. MOON, has given to this subject as chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. He certainly has made a sacrifice of his time and hard labor in the preparation of this bill, but I am constrained to believe, Mr. Chairman, that before many of the products of the farm could ever be moved under any bill before this House providing for a parcel post it would require an amendment to the general law providing for the establishment of post offices. If I am correct in this, then these parcel-post bills resolve themselves into this: They will give some relief to the shipper of the finished product, but none to the shippers of the products of the farm. Why make this discrimination? Why not frame a bill, general in character, which will move the product of the farm and the product of the factory alike, and on such terms as will be equitable and fair to all?

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, of course I would like to yield to every gentleman if I had time to do so. I will yield for a question.

Mr. KINDRED. I will only take a moment. The gentleman has referred to some of the effects of the proposed limited parcel-post bill. Does he not think, also, that one of its most fearful effects, were it too limited, would be to entirely destroy the small merchants and the country shopkeepers throughout the country?

Mr. FOWLER. Probably, Mr. Chairman, it may have an indirect effect on the small merchant in the country. I am not prepared to say. They are complaining, I know, and they say it will affect their business. But that is all conjecture. I never saw a condition present itself to the American people but what they were able to adjust themselves to it; and I put the fair and square proposition now that a law which will reduce the cost of transportation of the products of the farm and the products of the factory alike will inure to the benefit of American people as a whole. It may here and there work an injury upon a few. It would be a marvel if it did not.

Mr. Chairman, I have said none of the parcel-post bills will give the desired relief to the consumer. Let us examine them and see if this is true. All of them provide for a flat rate, and the rates most commonly agreed upon is 8 and 12 cents a pound. This means that the Government is to carry 1 pound 1 mile for 8 cents or carry it across the continent for 8 cents, without any discrimination whatever. Were the consumer interested in the long haul more than he is in the short haul, then the flat rate would be the best for us, but as we are interested vitally in the short haul, it becomes necessary in preparing a bill for either parcel post or postal express to carefully guard against excessive rates for the short haul, because nine-tenths of the transportation to the consumer is done by short hauls under 1,000 miles. The local merchant, the farmer, and the consumer have a common interest in the cheapest rates possible for the short haul, because the retail trade between the local merchant and the consumer or between the producer and consumer or the producer and the local merchant is largely transacted by short hauls. Let us examine rates for a short time.

It has been estimated that the Government pays the railroads an average of 9 cents per ton-mile for carrying the mails. Let us compare this rate with the proposed rate of 8 cents a pound on parcels up to and including 11 pounds. On close examination of the table which I submit it will be seen that 8 cents a pound is much more expensive for all distances under 1,000 miles than the rate now paid to the railroads for transporting the mails. This table has been prepared by Mr. George P. Hampton, secretary of the Farmers' National Committee on Postal Reforms. It will also be seen from this table that the proposed rate of 8 cents a pound for the long haul of 2,000 miles and more is much less than is paid by the Government to the railroads for carrying the mails, which is beneficial to the few who are engaged in the long haul—usually rich men. This table also shows that this rate is 500 per cent above the cost on the short haul and from 50 to 100 per cent below the cost on the long hauls. This discrimination against the short haul would tend to force the producer and the consumer farther apart, whereas their mutual welfare demands that they should be brought together in close proximity.

Comparison of the charges on 3, 7, and 11 pounds at various distances at the 8 cents per pound flat rate with the actual cost to the Government, showing the excessive charges above cost on the short hauls and the gross undercharges on the long hauls.

The establishment of a parcel post up to any given weight would take away from the express companies the carriage of all such packages and give the Government the monopoly thereof through the mails, which would force upon the shipper of short hauls a burden of from 500 to 700 per cent of the price paid to railroads by the Government. I cite these figures so that it may be clearly seen how unjust the flat-rate proposition is to the shipper of the short haul. In order to get at the extreme robbery which such a rate would permit on short hauls, let us take a ton and compare its cost of transportation by the Government with what it would cost under an 8-cent flat rate for a distance of 25 miles. The Government cost is $26.25, whereas the cost at the proposed rate of 8 cents per pound would be $160, which would impose an additional burden of $133.75, or more than 500 per cent. To transport a ton 1,000 miles would cost the Government $114, but to transport it by the proposed rate of 8 cents a pound would cost $160, which would leave a difference of $46, or about 44 per cent. By this comparison we see that the burden increases as the distance of the haul decreases. I cite the table for examination, which has been prepared by the same author who prepared the other table.

POSTAL EXPRESS.

Let us turn our attention to express rates. There are 13 big express companies doing an express business in this country. They pay to the railroads 47½ per cent of whatever rate fixed by them for the purpose of carriage, and they retain 52½ per cent of such rate. Practically all packages weighing less than 100 pounds have been turned over to these express companies by the railroads, so that the cost of transporting the small package may be fixed at a very high rate and divided between these two great corporations. While the railroads have nothing to do directly with making express rates, yet in making contracts for carrying express freight they require that the rate be not less than 150 per cent of freight rates on like commodities. The average express rate per ton is $31.20, and the average freight rate is $1.90 per ton, giving a ratio between express and freight rates of 16.42 to 1. This looks large, but when we consider that they hire all the work done and give the railroads almost half of the rate, we must conclude that the rate must necessarily be large under such conditions, and more especially when we take into consideration that their annual profits run up far into the millions. In 1910 they had a gross income of more than $146,000,000, and after paying the railroads nearly one-half of this sum and also paying all of the cost of handling their business, they had a net income of nearly $18,000,000. I hold in my hand a table compiled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which I will print in the RECORD for reference.

While these profits are very high and most unreasonable, yet the rates now fixed by the express companies are much less than that proposed by the parcel-post bills now before Congress. There are two rates most commonly favored by these bills, to wit, 8 and 12 cents a pound for all distances. The average distance express packages are carried is 196 miles, according to the best information. Now, let us compare the cost of carrying packages from 1 to 11 pounds the average distance by express companies with the cost of carrying the same packages the same distance under the flat rates of 8 and 12 cents a pound. The following table has been prepared upon a haulage distance of 196 miles:

Table comparing parcel-post rates with express-company rates.

	Parcel-post rates. 12 cents per pound.	Parcel-post rates. 8 cents per pound.	Express-company rates.
1-pound rate	$0.12	$0.08	[1] $0.10
2-pound rate	.24	.16	.16
3-pound rate	.36	.24	.24
4-pound rate	.48	.32	.32
5-pound rate	.60	.40	.40
6-pound rate	.72	.48	.45
7-pound rate	.84	.56	.45
8-pound rate	.96	.64	.45
9-pound rate	1.08	.72	.45
10-pound rate	1.20	.80	.45
11-pound rate	1.32	.88	.50
Total	7.92	5.22	3.97

[1] If prepaid the express companies will carry books at 2 ounces for a cent, minimum 10 cents, and merchandise 1 ounce for a cent, minimum 15 cents, to any point on their lines, up to the postal weight limit on such classes.

The express rate now charged is $31.20 a ton; the 8-cents-a-pound postal rate would cost $160 a ton; and the 12-cents-a-pound postal rate would cost $240 a ton. It will be readily seen that a parcel post based on either of these rates will give but little, if any, relief. The 12-cent rate is higher than the express on all the packages of 11 pounds and less, while the 8-cent rate is less on 1 and 2 pound packages only.

Mr. Chairman, nearly all of the civilized countries have worked out the economic question of the transportation of the small package and are giving to the citizen the advantage of a very low rate. In other words, they have engaged in the express business under national supervision and carry and deliver the small package as mail, which is denominated postal express. This system gives a rapid and cheap transportation both from the farm and factory to the consumer. I submit the following table to show the low ratio between the express rates and the freight rates in 11 of these countries, including the United States, so that her extreme high express rate may be compared with the very low rates in countries where they have established postal express:

These figures show that the express rates in this country as compared with our freight rates stand as 16.42 stands to 1. Argentina is the only country in the list with a higher freight rate than the United States, yet her express rate is 3.2 to 1, which is only about one-fifth as high as ours. Our express rates could be cut in two, 8.10 to 1, and be the highest in the list except Belgium; such a rate would give us a decent postal express with an opportunity to move the small package from the producer readily to the consumer.

In order to show what is moved in Germany through the postal express, I submit the following extract from Senate Document No. 379 of this session of Congress:

CHEAP AND QUICK TRANSPORTATION MAKES FOR GENERAL PROSPERITY.

How much the parcel post has meant in the past, how much it means now, and how much it is to mean in the Empire's marvelous development will never be known till some German Mulhall makes its work the subject of a brilliant special monograph. From the far-off shores of Heligoland and the North Sea fishing villages, the products of the deep are collected, carried across a large part of the Continent, and delivered, the service extending to the confines of Bohemia or even to Austria and Hungary, for there is a postal arrangement between the two Empires that admits all the benefits of the one to the citizens of the other. From the seaport cities come the bananas, oranges, lemons, pineapples, coconuts, the rich spices of the East, the finer fibers and textiles of Persia, India, China, and Japan; from Switzerland come the rich dairy products and marvelous honey gathered from its mountain flowers, a honey as rich as that of Hymettus; from the Rhine lands the wines are sent in baskets far beyond where the vine will grow; out of the south, by Botzen, on the hills near Innsbruck, and along Lake Garda go fruits and flowers to Berlin and Breslau, Konigsberg, Danzig, and Stettin. A message by wire, in case of a run on fruits or flowers, will be filled in 24 or 48 hours—the entire order, including the telegram, costing from 25 cents to $1, the latter price being exceptional, incurred only when the parcel exceeds 50 pounds. Under the 11-pound policy for 12 cents enormous shipments have been made and are being made. This rate is the popular one.

Mr. Chairman, what the postal express has done for other countries it will do for us, and I am inclined to think it is the proper solution of this question. What we need is some method which will give a low rate with a rapid transportation of the small package, say from 100 pounds and below, from the farm and the factory alike to the consumer. If such package could reach us free from the taint of plunder and exploitation, it would materially reduce the high cost of living. We are equipped throughout the country with a system or rural-route deliveries of mails, and if either a parcel post or a parcel express is established, deliveries of the small package could be made readily by increasing the force as the business increases.

Mr. Chairman, good roads, rural delivery, and parcel post or postal express, are so intimately connected with each other that the consideration of the one necessarily invokes the presence of the other two. All three of these questions have their enemies on the floor of this House and elsewhere in the money centers, because the maintenance of any or all of them will require the expenditure of large sums of money. The country people are looked upon by these gentlemen as being too common to receive legislative consideration for their relief, especially if large sums of money are required to be appropriated therefor. I can not agree with these gentlemen. I favor the widest latitude in the extension of all three of these modern uplifting influences in every State in the Union. This Government belongs to the people and they have a right to say how its powers shall be administered. The voice of the intelligent many is superior to and more stable than the will of the selfish few. I am not in sympathy with that national policy which advocates riches and luxury for the few and poverty and misery for the many. No man is worthy of any rights which he claims for himself unless he is willing to concede the same to all others. The farmers and employees in the factory and mines are the producers of wealth, and should be given an equal opportunity with the rich for intelligence and happiness in this life.

Labor has always had its enemies in every country and every clime. When King Darius learned that Athens had captured and burnt Sardis, a city of his kingdom, he called for his bow, placed an arrow on the string and shot it high up in the air, then turned his face toward heaven and exclaimed, "O Supreme God, grant me that I may avenge myself on the Athenians." And when he had said this he appointed one of his servants to say to him every day as he sat at meat, "Sire, remember the Athenians." The same spirit is abroad in the land to-day. Every time labor seeks legislation for relief, some selfish fellows are ready to invoke high heaven for strength to avenge themselves on labor. When the light of civilization dawned upon mankind the labor of the world was in abject slavery. The lords and masters owned the laborer as chattels, with power to sell or kill him at pleasure. They were despised and regarded as animals and kept under bondage for centuries.

None of the ancient republics were free enough to eliminate slavery. When Athens was in her palmiest days of democracy her slaves were abundant. When she reached a population of 200,000 people it is said that she had 179,000 slaves. Ancient Rome was likewise cursed with slavery. When she reached her greatest perfection as a republic more than two-thirds of her population were slaves. Out of a population of 90,000,000 people she had more than 60,000,000 slaves.

But as the love of liberty was planted in the bosom of the slave by his Creator he followed his instinct and fought for his freedom. The first victory gained by him raised him a degree above the slave with the denomination of serf, which bound him to the soil, and when the land was sold by his master, while he was not in terms sold, yet he passed with it. The laborer always remained on the land and was not permitted to depart therefrom. He was not only required to cultivate the soil, but he was often required to fight the battles of his master and his lord, and when the feudal system was inaugurated he stepped one step higher and became a servant, with some property rights for the first time in the history of the world. After the advent of Christ, the influence of the brotherhood which he established among men, teaching that all men were created in the image of God, the servant by his struggle for freedom became the intelligent employee and citizen of the country, with equal rights with every other man of the country. [Applause.] Yet this relic of barbarism still lingers about the haunts of the rich and they never miss an opportunity to show their displeasure and use their influence against any movement to better the condition of the toiling masses. Every upward step which has been taken by labor has been dearly paid for by the blood of innocent men struggling for liberty. The same fight must be made to-day as it has ever been made in the past, with this difference, I trust, that the sword may find its final resting place in its sheath on the wall and the battles of the future may be waged in words tempered by the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

Labor has always stood on the firing line bravely fighting the battles of civilization, whether in times of peace or in times of war. When the Nation called for soldiers to put down insurrection at home or to drive back the invading enemy, honest labor voluntarily answered the call from the farm, mine, and the workshop, while the rich waited for the draft, and then with their gold hired substitutes. Labor has built log huts on the frontier, bravely faced the danger of deadly climates, and endured the ravages of wild beasts and savage men in order that howling wildernesses might be converted into fertile fields of plenty, while the rich man has followed along after him with his gold and reaped the profits of his labor. Labor has constructed highways across continents, built the railroads and steamships of the world, dotted every clime with factories for the finished product, and bravely operates and manages every enterprise for the production of the raw material, for its conversion into the finished product, and for its final transportation to the consumer. He is still on the firing line with the brawn of his muscle and in the sweat of his face supplying mankind with food, raiment, and shelter. His labor is the source of all productive wealth, and yet all that he has received therefor is a meager living for himself and family. All the profits of his toil have been divided among his rich masters.

Mr. Chairman, I am not in sympathy with the idea that nothing should be done to help the country people for fear that it might increase the value of their property and better their condition. God bless the honest, sturdy yeoman of this country, with the hollyhock blossoming in his front yard and the morning glory twining about the door of his humble home. [Applause.] It is from his family that we get honest men to place upon the judicial bench of America. From these lowly walks men of courage have risen to lead the armies and navies of the world to glorious victories in causes of right and justice. Such families have furnished the best statesmen of the world, who have bravely marched into halls of state, rescued from the mailed hand of imperial power the rights of men, and securely enacted them into wholesome laws. [Applause.] From the ranks of the honest, sturdy, poor, pure men have sprung forth full fledged in qualities of heart and soul, and have steadily marched onward from the country cottage to the White House, and with policies of far-reaching statesmanship have directed the forces which have molded and shaped the destinies of this Republic. [Applause.] A community of such great moment ought to receive the fair consideration of every legislative body of the country, and until we give it that consideration which its importance demands we will not have dealt out to the country people their just rights. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY].

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Chairman, I am in accord with the measure which proposes that the Federal Government pay a just rate per mile for its use of certain roads in rural districts upon which the mails are carried.

I am also in favor of the broadest measure, whether it be called parcel post or parcel express, bringing to rural districts the advantages of prompt and ready transportation of small packages of merchandise at the lowest rates consistent with good and economical administration.

I am endeavoring from the discussion of the several parcel-post and parcel-express bills to weigh carefully their merits and defects with the sole purpose of supporting such measure as promises to the people of my district, and to the country at large, the fullest and most comprehensive system. I do not expect at this time to discuss the technical features of these bills, but prefer to establish a viewpoint, if you please, from which the needs for this kind of legislation may be observed and therefrom determine the best measure to be adopted. The problems of conservation have deeply interested the people of the country, and laws relating thereto, as applied to our forests, our water powers, and our mineral lands, have been adopted, but none of these are worthy of more careful consideration than the conservation of the American farm or the preservation of the American farmer.

The statistics which confront this Nation show that the American farmer is fast disappearing. At the beginning of this Government the rural population was 96 per cent of the whole; in 1850 it was 87 per cent; in 1890 it was 60 per cent; and in 1910 it had decreased to but 54 per cent.

This immense change in proportions is not nearly as startling as the fact that, notwithstanding the large increase in general population within the last 20 years, the rural population has actually decreased in nearly all the older settled districts, and the census figures just coming to my desk show that the farming localities have suffered loss in population during that period of time of from 25 to 33 per cent. This is noticeable in every rural community in the old Wilmot-Grow district of Pennsylvania, which I have the honor to represent.

Here is an economic situation of transcendent importance. It must be considered not only from the standpoint of the farmer, but of the public's need of him. I do not hesitate to say I view it from both.

No class of people have contributed more unselfishly to the public welfare. Whether in war or peace, the American farmer has followed and reverenced the flag. He has sent out strong, high-minded, and purposeful sons and daughters, whose keen minds in sound bodies have contributed to the business and professional activities in every walk in life.

This revelation of the census is a cause for national alarm, and is well worthy most careful thought if haply a solution may be found.

In the early days of this Nation the farmers were the chief citizens of our country, and I rebel against a modern conception which, from a position of assumed superiority among the people of the cities, proposes to place them among the unenlightened and less important of our national populace.

Indeed, I was much astonished to hear my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE], for whose opinions I have high regard, and who I regret is not here this afternoon, while speaking on this measure, after adverting to the fact that he was country born and would like to go back to the farm, say that he had urged the dwellers in the alleys and streets to go to the country. The problem can not be solved by such a low conception of the country's need.

The American farmer of to-day is not of the "alley" class. He is the best-read and thoroughly posted man upon current topics and affairs of the day. He takes the best magazines and reads the best books. His ethical conception is clearer and his judgment less warped by selfish purposes than almost any other class. His ideals are high and his instincts patriotic. The very nature of his employment makes him contemplative, and because thereof in the busy whirl of a rushing age he is a great conserving power and influence leading to national safety.

The dweller in the city has with avidity seized upon the modern inventions and forced them to pay tribute to his daily comfort and pleasure. The telephone, exceptional mail and transportation facilities, harnessed heat, light, and electricity are made to do his bidding. These with his thousand and one educational and inspirational advantages are now his necessities.

He forgets that his brother of the plow—his companion of former days—is still his equal with aspirations and ideals to be realized. He overlooks the fact that the farmer has also advanced with the age, and for his family, his boy, or girl, his outlook on life is broadened; that he, too, demands some of the conveniences, now necessities, which the Government has long since and at great cost given the city.

There are problems not easily solved by legislation. The farmer is the one man who does not fix the price upon anything he buys or sells. The other man controls both ends of the bargain, whether it be eggs or coffee, butter or sugar, produce or clothing.

Can the Nation afford to lose the farmer? How about the high cost of living then? How about it now?

The farmer has not been importunate. He has looked with no envious eye upon the legislation which has ameliorated the condition of his companion in toil, the wage earner in shop or on railroad, but now the day has come when the farmer will not be content to see the children of his heart, with equal capability of mind and body, handicapped by the privations and inequalities of the country, but he will send them to the city, and then the farm loses its best asset.

What is your solution? Intensive farming? Agricultural schools?

I admit the marvelous advances made in these directions and the splendid contributions of the Department of Agriculture to that end.

The man on the farm must have the transportation problem solved for him as it has been solved for the resident of the city. He must be in quick reach of market and supplies, of church, school, store, and doctor. He must be able to economize in time and material.

Environment is of vital importance, and good roads and an accessible market are fundamental.

We are told that more freight is hauled over public roads than on railroads; that the cost of hauling on our American roads is 23 cents per ton-mile as against 11 cents in England, 10 cents in Germany, and 7 cents in France. Surely this is a strong argument for better roads.

Opposition is made to parcel post because of the great expense, and rural free delivery, with its cost of $37,000,000, is pointed out. Even with such a large sum, three times that amount was expended for the city mail conveniences. Six hundred million dollars has been expended for improvement of waterways and harbors; $200,000,000 for public buildings in cities. Less than one-fifth the latter amount would provide an adequate parcel post or parcel express under any of the proposed bills.

Suppose the cost is large, the American farmer is worth while, whether viewed from an economic, ethical, social, or political standpoint.

The home is the real basis of our national life and safety, and the farmer is the natural conservator of the home. Let his home be surrounded by and accessible to the modern conveniences which annihilate time and distance—good roads, rapid transportation of mail, merchandise, and persons—and then with the modern scientific education open to every farmer boy of the land you have in large measure solved the problem. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY] takes his seat, I would like to interject a very brief observation into his remarks touching the large amounts of money that have been appropriated for rivers and harbors and public buildings. I had occasion to brief up river and harbor appropriations somewhat, and I was interested to find in the early messages of the Presidents touching internal improvements that roads were mentioned and recommended for Federal appropriations along with and nearly as frequently as rivers. Indeed, there are a number of the messages of the Presidents in which you will find the term "roads and rivers" mentioned together; but in some way or another roads seem to have been dropped out and we continue to appropriate for rivers.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] want to use some time now?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not expired, and the gentleman from Colorado interupted the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the latter's time.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I just interrupted him there in order to make that statement.

Mr. AINEY. I desire to yield back the portion of time I did not occupy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has occupied 12 minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman want any time now?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I first wish to make a little clearer the suggestion that I made to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY], that it appears in the early history of the country, as I find from messages of the Presidents, the matter of improvement of roads was dealt with in those messages quite as frequently as the improvement of rivers. In other words, I frequently found the recommendations for the improvement of roads and of rivers coupled together. It seems, however, that in later times there were no references whatever to roads, but altogether to rivers; and I favor the Shackleford good-roads amendment for the reason, among others, that if it becomes law we will only be restoring roads to their ancient place, along with rivers, among internal improvements, which is the only way the Government may do equity to those sections of the country having no navigable waters.

THE PARCEL POST.

Mr. Chairman, the pending postal appropriation bill, under the special rule adopted by the House, which permits the amendment of the bill by adding thereto the parcel-post and postal-express legislation, marks an epoch in the progress of this Government in the service of all the people.

With three exceptions this special rule permits the engrafting upon the pending bill of the most important and beneficial legislation enacted by the American Congress in the past 30 years. The three exceptions to which I refer are the Sherman antitrust, interstate-commerce, and income-tax laws. The importance of those three measures is attested by the fact that the first two—the Sherman antitrust and interstate-commerce laws—are furnishing the Federal courts of the United States, and more especially the Supreme Court, with the bulk of the most important work of the judicial department of this Government; and the importance of the third measure is attested by the fact that the 48 States in this Union will by three-fourths majority shortly ratify an income-tax amendment to the Constitution of the United States, thereby reversing the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in which it held the income tax unconstitutional and which decision was itself a reversal of the uniform decisions of that tribunal throughout the entire history of this Government.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that so far as results in the way of tangible benefits to the people of the country are concerned, the Sherman antitrust and interstate-commerce laws and the income-tax amendment amount as yet to no more than declarations of principle, but the soil is being prepared and the seed sown against the day when the people of this country will come into their own and when the burden will be transferred from the backs of the people to the backs of the private interests, which are the greatest beneficiaries of government, but which have thus far prevailed against every effort to curb, regulate, and make them what they ought to be—the servitors of the common good.

As affecting the postal department of the Government there are two general propositions presented by the pending amendments, the establishment in a very limited degree of the parcel post and the taking over by the Post Office Department of the express business. I can consider these propositions only in a general way in the brief time allotted me.

I want to say at the outset that I am for a genuine parcel post in this country, including the transaction by the postal department of the business now handled by private express companies.

It would be a waste of time at this late day to argue the great success of the postal department of this Government. If a public man were to propose its transfer into private control he would not be denounced as a public enemy; he would be laughed at as a fool; and if he proposed to curtail its functions or its service in any particular he would be driven from public life. Not so great a mistake, but none the less a mistake, would it be to assume that this great arm of the public service has reached its maximum development. On the contrary, the time is almost if not quite ripe for a substantial increase in the postal service, not by way of the creation and addition of new and strange functions, but by the enlargement and extension of functions already existing.

In this connection I wish to read into my remarks a copy of a letter which has left my office almost daily, addressed to one or more of my constituents, for the past two years. Before I read it I want to say that it is somewhat in the nature of an experiment. Everyone knows the extreme diversity of popular views on the question of the parcel post. In one letter a Member receives a resolution adopted by a board of trade in some town in his district, saying that if a parcel post is established it will absolutely ruin them. I receive such letters as that, with no qualification whatever. "Establish a parcel post and we will be absolutely ruined." In the same mail, perhaps, you get a letter from some individual or farmers' or labor organization demanding a parcel post before all other legislation that can be given them at the hands of Congress.

I therefore resorted to the unique experiment of framing up a stock letter, which I send to all comers, whether for or against the parcel post. I do not know how that system will work out as a vote getter. I am not looking for any votes this fall, and can not demonstrate it. But I have made it a practice thus far in my brief public career never to be on both sides of any question, and particularly never to be on both sides of it at the same time. The letter is as follows:

DEAR ——: I am in receipt of so many communications for and against the parcel post that I find it necessary to compose a set letter to be sent to all communicants.

I believe that every improvement and extension of the means of transportation and communication build up our civilization as a whole and in all its parts and stimulate and increase business and all social intercourse. I do not believe the parcel post will affect our local communities except in the same way that they have been affected by railways, telegraphs, telephones, the postal system, free delivery, rural routes, etc.

As a matter of fact, we already have a parcel post limiting the weight of the package to 4 pounds in the domestic mails at 16 cents per pound and to 11 pounds in the foreign mails at 12 cents per pound. Any parcel-post legislation, therefore, must deal merely with the question of changing the size of the package or the postage rate or both.

To this end there are many bills pending, the different features of which I can not undertake to discuss in the compass of a letter. I can only say that I am in favor of progressive legislation along mail-service lines, which shall include both the enlargement of the package and the reduction of the rate. And I shall not look to see this enlargement of postal facilities injuriously affect the smaller localities, because trade is reciprocal. It is an old and invariable rule that the increase of facilities leads directly to increase of use, but I shall look for this rule to work both ways in the case of the parcel post and build up the local merchant even more than it pulls him down, just as is proving to be the case with banking in relation to the postal savings bank. The merchant is in the shipping business, and I firmly believe that he will send and receive more packages by mail than all his customers combined. Furthermore, this extension of the mail service, like the postal savings bank, will come gradually and almost imperceptibly take its place among the agencies that build up and bless civilization, which I firmly believe will be its principal result.

Very truly, yours, ———— ————.

Mr. Chairman, the time has arrived when we may pass from general statements of principle to concrete propositions such as are presented under the rule in the pending parcel-post amendments.

There are three parcel-post propositions presented in the pending bill; that is, in the amendments that will be permitted to be offered in connection with this bill under the rule.

GENERAL PARCEL-POST COMMISSION.

I shall not discuss the third proposition, because it merely calls for a general parcel-post commission to investigate and report upon the question of establishing a general parcel post in the United States, to which there can be but little objection, except, perhaps, the objection that it would cause unnecessary delay. The commission proposition seems to be pretty popular nowadays, and it seems to be more popular with the people and the interests that are opposed to any given legislation than with those who are in favor of it. They will get another lease of life through a commission, so that as a last resort, when they can not stave off action in any other way, they recommend a commission to investigate and report upon it.

I want to say, however, that this observation and others that I shall make are not to be taken as in criticism of the committee, because I believe that the present Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is deserving, above all such committees in the history of this country, of the commendation of the people of the country.

I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, that this Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has made a real start. When in the history of Congress have there been such subjects of debate on pending legislative propositions as we now find before this House as a result of the action of the present Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads? They have moved a decade in this session of Congress. They have caught up, crystallized, and put into concrete propositions of legislation ideas which have been agitated in this country for a great many years.

Mr. STEENERSON. As I understand it, the gentleman believes in riders on appropriation bills?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I believe in riders on appropriation bills if I can not get the legislation in any other way.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman contend that this legislation could not have been brought in here in some other way?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not believe in hiding behind the technical objection that a thing is new legislation engrafted upon an appropriation bill. The gentleman knows just as well as I do how difficult it is for any legislation, no matter how pressing, to get the right of way in this House.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Or the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Revenue and appropriation bills take up the greater portion of the time. Why, Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee that has framed the most important piece of legislation, so far as the world is concerned, that this Congress can enact, and that is the Panama Canal legislation. Our able chairman [Mr. ADAMSON] has been fighting for weeks to get that bill before this House, and the head of the Panama Canal Commission is criticizing Congress to the world for failure to enact that legislation for which the shipping interests of the world are clamoring, and we may have to stick that into an appropriation bill in order to get an opportunity to consider it before the end of this Congress.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman does not believe in riders on appropriation bills as a general rule? It is only where there is an exigency, as I understand it, that he believes in that sort of legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I might not want to enact all new legislation in that way, but I am not going to find any quarrel with the oportunities which have been presented to us on this bill to get this legislation, which, in my judgment, is the most beneficial that this Congress can possibly enact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

APPLYING FOREIGN WEIGHT AND RATE TO DOMESTIC MAILS.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The first proposition in the pending amendments applies the foreign postal weight and rate to the domestic mails. It now costs 16 cents a pound to send fourth-class matter by mail from any point to any point in the United States, and the weight of the package is limited to 4 pounds, while a package up to 11 pounds may be mailed at the rate of 12 cents per pound from any point in the United States to any point in 23 foreign countries. If the provision in the pending bill becomes law, the foreign weight and rate will be applied to the domestic mails.

So far as I can determine, this provision would remove an anomaly in existing postal regulations, without any substantial benefits to the people. I do not know of any haul in this country in which this provision offers any advantage over present express rates. Indeed I doubt if there are any hauls upon which existing express rates would not be cheaper, and in the great bulk of cases very much cheaper. So far, then, as benefits are concerned, this provision will be ineffective.

RURAL PARCEL POST.

The second proposition establishes a limited rural parcel post, under which fourth-class matter in parcels not exceeding 11 pounds may be mailed from any point to any point upon the rural route upon which it originates, at 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound, which would fix the cost of the maximum 11-pound package at 25 cents.

It appears to be the consensus of opinion that this provision will result in a marked increase of business on the rural routes, which means that it will be a substantial benefit. As this traffic will largely be from the local merchant to his patrons upon the rural route, it is a singular and significant fact that the merchants in the towns and villages in which rural routes originate are as much opposed to the rural parcel post as to the general parcel post, this opposition being due to the fact that the former is considered as the forerunner of the latter. This assumption, I believe, is correct, but I make the prediction that once the rural parcel post is established and in operation, a Representative would no more dare to propose its abolition than he would to propose the abolition of the rural route itself. The telephone and the parcel route would bring the farm to the town and the town to the farm, and neither town nor farm would consent to dispense with or limit either of these beneficent services.

I am in favor of these two propositions in so far as they recognize, enlarge, and promise to carry out the existing great principle of the postal service, but I reserve the right to vote for a general parcel post at this time should such a proposition be offered, and I apprehend it will, when the parcel post section is reached for amendment under the five-minute rule.

GENERAL PARCEL POST.

The principal general parcel-post proposition now pending in form of a bill, I am advised, is one fixing the top weight at 11 pounds and the rate at 8 cents per pound. The principal objection to this and other parcel-post legislation, which I have heard raised, is that, like the 12-cent rate, it would be taken advantage of by the express companies, just as the present postal laws and conditions are taken advantage of, and the express companies would handle the profitable short-haul traffic, leaving the Government to handle the unprofitable long hauls; although this measure, in common with the pending amendments, is subject to the objection, and I emphasize this point, that it is limited to what is now known as fourth-class mail matter, which embraces a very limited number of articles, practically none of which are produced on the farm. Thus we will have a rail parcel post which, as to the limited number of things carried, can not, except as to the longer hauls, compete with the express companies, and a rural parcel post which will operate only one way, and this as to a limited number of articles of merchandise, from the town to the farm.

THE POSTAL EXPRESS.

I come, therefore, to the postal-express provision reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee, known as the Goeke and Lewis bills, which not only answers but completely removes these objections by abolishing the express companies and fourth-class mail limits, and offers to the people of this country a genuine parcel post, already in existence, but existing only for the benefit of its stockholders.

I take off my hat to the inventor of the express business. He was a genius, who made something out of nothing. If you can rent an office, hire a team and wagon, and get a contract with a railroad company, you have an express business already organized; and if you can rent enough offices, hire enough teams and wagons, and get enough railroad contracts you have got a monopoly of the express business. There is less capital and more profit in the express business than any business I ever heard of; in fact, the express business is no capital and all profit. The express business is a parasite, pure and simple. It consists of four factors, three of which—offices, horses and wagons, and railroad contracts—are simple, and one of which—rates—is multiplex and complex beyond the understanding of any but an interstate-commerce expert. These three simple added to this one compound and mysterious element have been able to produce a system of transportation in the United States just sixteen times more costly to the people than freight, and so profitable to its owners that it repays the actual investment annually, which accounts for the fact that among its assets have been listed objects of value ranging all the way from skyscrapers down to easy bosses.

The real question ought not to be whether we will put this parasite out of business and to that extent simplify the great transportation problem in the United States, but whether we ought to pay for its office fixtures, horses, wagons, and contracts. In view of the fact that the Government would have to purchase some of the facilities now used in the express business and for the sake of peace, as well as being averse to the uncompensated destruction of any legitimate investment even by indirection, I, as a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, voted to report favorably the pending proposal to condemn and take over the contracts, equipment, and other property necessarily and properly used by the express companies of the United States in the express business, said business to be hereafter conducted as part of the postal service of the United States.

Express transportation is a necessity conducted as a luxury. It is almost as much a medium of transmission from individual to individual as is the United States mail, but its cost is practically prohibitive. Because of this fact it is used once where it ought to be used many times. In addition, it has only very limited zones of delivery from its distributing offices. It has no rural deliveries at all, and even in the cities one must reside within a certain radius in order to have express parcels delivered. By the average person the express business is regarded and avoided as a skin game, which, in truth, it is. It occupies a twilight zone between the postal and railway service, existing as a leech upon the former and as a feeder to the latter.

It has been complained of the postal service that at times its rates upon one class of mail matter or another were reduced so low as to cause the business as a whole to be conducted at a loss, but no such charge as this can be brought against the express business. That the postal service has been a losing business venture is not true in a proper sense. At times marked reductions in the charge for service have brought temporary shortages of revenue, but aside from the fact that these temporary shortages were in the interest of the people, the growth of business induced by the lower rate has eventually balanced the scale of receipts and expenditures and the postal service is at this time upon a self-sustaining basis, with the agitation growing in favor of still further reductions in first and fourth class mail rates.

There should be no question of loss involved in the taking over of a class of matter so highly profitable as the express business. The postal service, taking over this kindred business, will be able to operate it much cheaper than a dozen separate and distinct express companies. The Government may not only heavily cut the cost of operation, but it may lop off the exorbitant profits. The result ought to be a greatly enlarged and cheapened use of the service, and still upon a self-sustaining basis.

I have not made the kind of study of this subject which enables me to speak in tables of figures. A fellow lawyer has said that the practice of law nowadays is not the study and application of fundamental principles but the matching of cases; that it is not so important to know what the law is as where to find it. So the modern lawyer is always looking for what is known to the profession as the "cow case," something on all fours with the particular trouble on hand. And it is a good deal the same in lawmaking. Instead of looking out over the field of human activities and studying and reasoning from what we see, we rush to books and documents for tables of comparisons and schedules of figures out of which to reconstruct or create systems. Without despising the use of figures which, touching this legislation, I must leave to those who have made a statistical study of it, I look out over the land at the great postal service of the country, with its official head here in the city of Washington and with its ramifications in every city, town, and hamlet, upon every railway, upon the streets of every city, and almost upon every highway, serving the mail needs of a Nation of ninety millions of people with an efficiency and cheapness which challenges any private institution in this country, if not, indeed, any institution in the world. It is one system, one service, under one head. It carries anything in weight in the domestic mails, but not in character, from a postal card up to a 4-pound package. This single system reaches every point made by the combined dozen of express companies, and thousands upon thousands of places which they do not reach. The mail car and the express car are loaded at the same place and in the same manner and are, in the majority of cases, attached together upon the same train. What is there in the situation of a practical character which prevents the consolidation of these traffics? This question has been answered in the countries of Europe, and the answer is nothing, and that must be the answer in this country. And that answer would have been given long ago if it were not for the fact that private-property privileges, misnamed rights, are so in the ascendent in this country that any attempt to regulate or convert them to the public use is met with the cry of paternalism, socialism, or some other ism.

I congratulate the times upon the fact that the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress has, by almost unanimous vote, adopted a rule whereby it may go upon record for or against a parcel post and postal express in the United States, and I have no doubt that while the majority for these propositions may not be so overwhelming as for the adoption of the rule, yet there will be majorities for both of them. And that this action will be the real forerunner in the near future of the substantial enlargement of the great and beneficent postal service in this country.

My attention has been called to a case, with the facts of which I am not familiar, involving the arrest of a railway mail clerk in the State of Colorado on a charge of carrying for pay in his mail car and personally delivering a mailable package. This, I am advised, is the substance of the charge. Attached to the mail car in which this clerk was at work was an express car presumably more or less filled with mailable packages, but carried for pay by the railroad company for the express company, with which it almost equally divides the carriage charges.

In connection with the foregoing statement of facts, I append by request a memorandum prepared for Mr. KENYON, then an Assistant Attorney General of the United States and now a United States Senator from the State of Iowa, the memorandum being of date October 5, 1910, and entitled:

[Memorandum for Mr. KENYON.]

OCTOBER 5, 1910.

IN RE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SECTIONS 3982 TO 3985, REVISED STATUTES, BY THE CARRIAGE OF MAILABLE MATTER OTHER THAN LETTERS IN COMPETITION WITH THE POSTAL SERVICE.

If the legality or illegality of practice of express companies and others of carrying merchandise and printed matter in competition with the postal service turned upon the power of Congress to forbid such competition it would not, in my judgment, be troublesome.

It appears from the various historical authorities referred to in the brief of Nathan B. Williams, submitted to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, in a test case brought by him against the Wells-Fargo Express Co., that from its very beginning the Government postal service in England, as well as in this country, has handled merchandise in small packages, as well as letters and literature of various sorts; and even if this immemorial practice had not made it the function of the Post Office Department to handle such matter, the action of Congress in declaring at various times and in various ways that all kinds of literature and merchandise would be carried in the mail, subject only to a limitation as to weight and the safety of other mail matter in the case of merchandise, has undoubtedly fixed the functions of the postal service in that respect.

The power of Congress to do this seems to me indisputable, because even if at the time of the adoption of the Constitution merchandise in small parcels was not universally recognized as mail matter, there certainly was no universal belief that the activities of the postal authorities were to be limited to the carriage of letters and other printed matter, so that the grant to Congress of the power to establish post offices and post roads necessarily conferred authority to determine what should constitute mail matter. If this be not so, then Congress has from the beginning of our Government exceeded its constitutional authority by authorizing and requiring the Post Office Department to carry in the mails other things than letters and printed matter, for if at the time of the adoption of the Constitution the function of the postal service was universally conceived to be limited to the carriage of letters and printed matter, then the grant of power to establish a postal service was subject to the same limitation, with the result that it only conferred authority upon the General Government to convey letters and printed matter.

Further than that, it was explicitly held in the case of Ex parte Jackson (96 U. S., 727) that "the power possessed by Congress embraces the regulation of the entire postal system of the country," and includes the right to prescribe what should constitute mail matter.

I realize, of course, that if it be conceded that Congress has power to make merchandise in small quantities mail matter, it might be contended that the Government could, if it chose, take over the entire business of transporting property as a part of the postal enterprise; but it seems to me that the courts would not be greatly troubled over that question. They would draw the line whenever it appeared that Congress was attempting to abuse its power under the postal clause, just as they draw the line between reasonable and unreasonable police regulations of the States.

Beyond that, it must be remembered that we are not alone concerned about the transportation of ordinary merchandise, but that perhaps the greatest and most harmful competition between express companies and the postal department is in respect of newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other printed matter which is now carried as merchandise, and I can not see how such things can fail to come within the strictest definition of mail matter, since their fundamental purpose is always to "diffuse intelligence" or information.

It being thus established that it is the function of the Post Office Department to carry merchandise in small quantities, or at least to carry printed matter of every sort and description, the power of Congress to forbid private carriage of such matter in competition with the Post Office Department is hardly open to dispute.

Like all other congressional powers, the power to establish a postal department carries with it, by implication, authority to do whatever may be necessary to the preservation and successful operation of that department, and the question of whether or not a particular regulation is essential to either of those ends is primarily a legislative rather a judicial one, with the result that its congressional determination is not open to review in the courts, save in a case of gross abuse of discretion.

It can hardly be claimed that it would be an abuse of legislative discretion for Congress to declare that the interests of the Post Office Department require the monopolization by it of the business of carrying all mailable matter. There is no necessity to state in detail the various considerations showing the propriety of such a measure. Not only has Congress repeatedly asserted this right of monopolization without question of the propriety of its action ever being made, but the constitutionality of its enactments has been sustained—not only by opinions of the Attorneys General (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 159; id., 276; 21 id., 384), but also by the Supreme Court in the case of Ex parte Jackson, supra. It has been suggested that while this case affirms the right of the Government to monopolize the carriage of letters, it denies a like congressional right in respect of other kinds of mail, on the theory that the power of the Government to monopolize extends only to such matter as is strictly mail, and that although merchandise and printed matter are carried in the mail, they are not in their essence mail matter.

While it is true that the court used language which taken by itself would seem to indicate that it held the stated view, it seems to me that the decision itself does not so adjudge. The question before the court was whether or not Congress could prohibit the mailing of letters or circulars or other matter relating to lotteries. The assertion that Congress lacked the power so to do was based upon the fact that the business of carrying such matter had already been monopolized by the Government, and that, therefore, if such matter could not be sent through the mails it could not be sent at all. Consequently, the question before the court was whether or not the Government could, while refusing itself to carry given matter, at the same time prevent its carriage in any other way; and I think the court did not intend by its language to go further than to hold that if Congress refused permission to transport matter in the mails, such refusal necessarily operated to make the monopolization statutes inapplicable to such matter. The separate treatment of letters on the one hand and other mail matter on the other hand in the opinion is to be accounted for—not on the ground that the court conceived the powers of Congress to be different in respect of the two, but because, as the court held, there was a practical difficulty in the way of the enforcement of the law against sealed mail, viz, the constitutional guaranty against unreasonable searches and seizures, which did not exist in the case of unsealed mail, which the Government had the right to inspect and refuse to carry if it was of the prohibited kind. I do not, therefore, regard the Jackson case as adverse to the views I have expressed.

But even though the power of Congress to prohibit the carriage of merchandise and printed matter in competition with the Government mail service be conceded, there still remains the question whether or not it has been exercised; and this question depends for its answer upon the meaning of the word "packet" as used in the sections of the Revised Statutes forbidding the transportation of any "letter or packet" in competition with the postal service. I do not myself doubt that the word "packet" as so used referred to packages or parcels of merchandise or printed matter. It seems to me that the considerations advanced by Mr. Williams in his brief make this view quite conclusive, but, unfortunately, that precise question arose in 1873, and the Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department gave an unequivocal opinion to the effect that the word "packet" as used in the stated phrase meant "packet of letters" or other matter sent first class. (Op. No. 14, beginning p. 36, vol. 1, of Opinions of Assistant Attorney General for Post Office Department from June 23, 1873, to Apr. 28, 1885.)

A like opinion was expressed by Attorney General MacVeagh, under date June 29, 1881, a copy of which appears in our correspondence file (119346), but it seems never to have been reported in the printed opinions of the Attorneys General.

Pursuant to these opinions, the Post Office Department's compilation of the postal laws and regulations have, from the first issue thereof after 1873 (namely, that of 1879), down to the most recent issue in 1902, contained the statement that the provisions of the Revised Statutes forbidding the carriage of letters or packets in competition with the Post Office Department related only to first-class mail matter and did not forbid the carriage by private express of any other kind of mail matter.

It is needless to cite authorities with respect to the great weight attaching to long-continued administrative construction of statutes. The courts have repeatedly said that such construction would be followed in any doubtful case, and in this instance the construction has been followed so long—nearly 40 years—and has been so frequently and widely published and thoroughly understood by everyone that the courts would be obliged to presume that it is well known to Congress, and therefore that if it were not in accord with the true intent of the act Congress itself would have adopted a new statute incapable of the old construction. Of course it is true that the administrative construction can not deprive the courts of the right finally to interpret statutes, but in this case, for the reasons I have indicated, I can not believe that the courts would repudiate the position which has heretofore been consistently adhered to by the Government. In my opinion, therefore, a prosecution under the present laws would not be successful. The remedy is by amendment of the statute.

I also append, by request, an article entitled "The post office our mutual express company," which appears in a publication called Postal Progress, issued by the Postal Progress League of Massachusetts:

THE POST OFFICE OUR MUTUAL EXPRESS COMPANY.

The postman is an older character than the Sphinx, but the end of the old-time post was espionage and taxation—the service of the old-time king. The modern post office is our mutual express company; its business is to save the citizen from exploitation by the modern railway king.

Inaugurated by Rowland Hill, of England, in the establishment of the uniform English penny letter post of 1839, the modern post office rests upon this fundamental law: "That in public transportation the cost of the service rendered is regardless the distance traversed by any unit of traffic upon the moving machinery." This law not only governs the postal world to-day; it is so generally applied in the railway world—it is in common use in city trolley traffic and in through carload freight traffic—that its application to the entire business of public transportation under the post office would be little more than the establishment of a widespread railway custom as a common law under the lawmaking power.

The modern American city owes its growth and prosperity to its uniform 5-cent fare. To the postage-stamp system of rates in through carload freight traffic more than to anything else, say our great railway authorities, is due our national prosperity. Upon its continuance, says Mr. Tuttle, late president of the Boston & Maine Railroad, depends the existence of New England's industries, and it not only keeps old industries going, said the railway president, it creates new industries, and in evidence of this truth he points to the flourishing paper-mill town of Millinocket, Me., that came into being only after its projectors had been assured that their products should be carried to Chicago and other great markets on the terms allowed towns close to those markets.

As to the possibilities in this direction, please note that even with the present wasteful management of our great post roads, waste that may be reasonably estimated at well-nigh a billion dollars a year—the average station-to-station railway rate is less than $1.08 a ton, but a trifle over 10 cents a 200-pound parcel, for the average haul of 141 miles, and about 63 cents for the average 33-mile trip of a passenger.

Under a scientifically managed post office controlled by scientific legislation, a general freight and passenger post, with station-to-station rates—10 cents, 200-pound parcels, 4 cubic feet bulk; 50 cents ton parcels, 40 cubic feet bulk—with similar low uniform passenger fares, would seem altogether practicable, and with trolley lines and automobiles connecting our great post-road stations with the homes of the people, the time would soon arrive when, within the perfected system of transportation, we would have uniform rates, door to door everywhere; parcels up to a pound in weight, one twenty-fourth of a cubic foot in bulk, 1 cent; larger parcels, up to 5 pounds, 2 cents; 11-pound parcels, 5 cents; 25 pounds, 10 cents; 60 pounds, 15 cents; half-barrel parcels, 100 pounds, 20 cents; barrel parcels, 4 cubic feet bulk, 200 pounds, 25 cents, etc., paying the full cost of the service rendered.

I believe that our common welfare demands the immediate extension of the post office over the whole business of public transportation and transmission. The next best thing would be the extension of our cent-a-pound publishers' post to cover all mail matter. The least that can be expected of Congress this winter, as it seems to me, is the establishment of a parcel post as cheap and as extended as that provided by our bill, H. R. 14, introduced April 4, 1911, by Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, of New York, entitled:

"A bill to reduce postal rates, to improve the postal service, and to increase postal revenues."

This bill increases the general weight limit of the postal service from 4 to 11 pounds and consolidates the third and fourth classes of mail matter in the general service at 1 cent each 2 ounces, 8 cents a pound, the old common merchandise rate of 1874, and the rate at which parcels of merchandise are now posted from Germany, Austria, and Italy throughout this country under our existing parcel-post conventions. The proposed domestic rate is indeed a little higher than the existing foreign rate.

In city free-delivery services this bill provides for a local sealed parcel or letter service, consolidating the first, third, and fourth classes of mail matter at 2 cents the first 4 ounces, 1 cent each additional 2 ounces, the common letter-post rate of Great Britain.

Section 3 consolidates all mail matter in one class in the local service of our rural routes at a common rate, parcels up to one twenty-fourth of a cubic foot in dimensions, 1 pound in weight, 1 cent; larger parcels, up to one-half a cubic foot, 11 pounds in weight, 5 cents; larger parcels, up to 1 cubic foot, 6 by 12 by 24 inches, the capacity of the ordinary suit case and up to 25 pounds in weight, 10 cents.

Section 4 provides for the insurance of all mail matter; the ordinary postage carrying insurance up to $10; the 10-cent registration fee insures parcels of declared value up to $50, and an additional fee of 2 cents for each additional $50 carries insurance up to the full value of the parcel.

With this bill enacted into law, the mailing of but 25 pounds of merchandise a year by the average American family, in its general postal traffic at the new 8 cents a pound rate, would increase the annual merchandise income of the Post Office from the $8,000,000 of 1907 to over $36,000,000, and the mailing of a similar amount by the average city family in their local service would add a local city income of full $10,000,000. The wants of the average rural family would surely require the posting to and from the post town and the home of at least one 10-cent packet a week; and even such a scanty use of the service, implying an outgo of only about $10 a year per family, would increase the postal revenues by over $40,000,000 a year, an amount sufficient to meet the cost of the whole rural service, covering every possible charge that could be made against all matter brought from the outside world, including the $13,000,000 charge against second-class mail matter.

The American Express Co. carries English postal parcels, 3 to 11 pounds, from New York City to the domicile of the addressee anywhere within its lines for 24 cents.

All the great American express companies collect and deliver parcels of newspapers, distances up to 1,000 miles, anywhere within the two zones into which our continental area is divided by the Ohio-Pennsylvania State line, 10 pounds for 10 cents. The cost of posting a parcel is absolutely regardless of the character of its contents.

The German post office carries 8-ounce letters for 5 pfennings (about 1 cent) and merchandise parcels up to 11 pounds, distances up to 46 miles, 6 cents; for greater distances, within the Austrian and German Empires, the rate on merchandise parcels is 12 cents.

Two-pound book packets go from any post office in Germany to any post office in German Africa for 7½ cents.

The Great Eastern Railway of England carries 20-pound parcels of agricultural produce from any of its agricultural stations to the home of any patron within 3 miles of its stations in London for 8 cents.

At the parcel-post hearings of April, 1910, at Washington, Mr. Charles Underhill, a retail merchant of Somerville, Mass., said "that the local express companies of Boston transport parcels to the homes in the suburban towns up to 15 miles from Boston, 10 pounds for 5 cents; 10 parcels of lead or nails, of a hundred pounds each, for $1. (Pages 236–237 of the Parcel Post Hearings of April, 1910.) And at the parcel-post hearings of June, 1911, Mr. E. W. Bloomingdale, counsel of the Retail Dry Goods Association of New York, said that the New York stores are delivering their merchandise—from a package of needles to a refrigerator—to their suburban customers, 30 to 35 miles away, at a cost of from 3½ cents to 4 cents a packet. (Page 105 of the Parcel Post Hearings at Washington of June, 1911.)

Verily, if we must needs try further postal experiments, then nothing less than the enactment of our bill (H. R. 14) into law this winter will satisfy the public demand for the immediate establishment of an extended parcel post. But neither an 11-pound parcel post at 8 cents a pound nor an unlimited cent-a-pound parcel post can secure that reduction in the cost of living and that widening of the opportunities for getting a living which is the cry of the hour.

Our opponents acknowledge, moreover, that any extension of the postal service means its final extension over the whole business of transportation and transmission, and it is clearly manifest that with this accomplished, the chaos, disorder, and fear that broods over us to-day will disappear and it will be quickly discovered that our old earth is big enough for all of us and rich enough to meet the needs of each of us. Then, why not establish a general freight and passenger post, now?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I certainly congratulate myself on the splendid audience which greets me here this afternoon. [Applause.] One can always get an inspiration from a large audience. I have no set speech to deliver; I only felt that the importance of the question pending here now warranted me in offering some observations. We have reached the point in the Post Office appropriation bill whereby the rule adopted the other day makes it in order to consider some very important propositions in connection with that bill. As the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] so well said a while ago, we have reached that point in legislation in regard to the Post Office Department in the transmission of the mails and of other matters which are being demanded by the people throughout the country and which requires our very careful consideration.

Since I have been a Member of this House I frankly state to you that no question has arisen which has given me as much concern as has the question of the parcel post.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. I think that is true of us all.

Mr. HAMLIN. My good friend on my right says that is true with all of us, and I have no doubt but that he is correct. In the study of this question I have tried to approach it from the viewpoint of the greatest good to the greatest number. It is not a political question, and I have at no time considered it in that sense. There is no moral question involved and no party question involved. It is purely a business proposition.

On the one hand, we have the great body of the farmers and laboring men in this country demanding a general parcel post, and on the other hand, we have the local retail merchants throughout the country protesting against the passage of any such legislation, arguing that it will work to their great injury, and as many of them state to me in letters, that it will absolutely ruin their business.

I think I can say that I know in my own district where I am known that no man would accuse me of voting for any proposition that would injure any man or business if I can prevent it. My own judgment of this matter is that both sides to this controversy have greatly exaggerated its effect. I do not believe that a general parcel post will be of the pecuniary advantage to the farmers throughout the rural districts that they have been led to expect and believe. I believe that the great advantage will be the convenience which it will be to them to have their parcels as well as their mails delivered at their doors.

On the other hand, I do not believe that it will work the injury to the local retail merchant that he seems to apprehend.

The farmers throughout my section of the country—and I think they are not different from those of other sections—are, as a rule, patriotic; they love their homes and their communities and will not be willing to ruthlessly work injury to either. I am quite sure, everything else being equal, they would prefer to patronize the local merchant, the man whom they know. It is natural, of course, for anyone buying to want to see the article they purchase before they part with their money. Therefore, I believe, everything else being equal, that the farmers are going to patronize the local merchants even though we establish a parcel-post system.

But they demand the right to buy wherever they can buy the cheapest, and in that they are undoubtedly right. If we would take the extreme argument of the merchants who are so violently opposed to this legislation as correct, what position does it put the Member of Congress in? They tell us that if you enact a general parcel-post law it will injure their business, if not entirely ruin them, because the large department stores will sell to the people cheaper than they can afford to sell, and that the farmers and laboring people will therefore patronize the department stores in the cities. If that be true, I submit that a Member of Congress who has no interest personally in the matter but to represent his people honestly can reach but one conclusion. If that argument be true, the farmer, it will be conceded, has the right to buy wherever he can buy the cheapest; then the law would consequently be to the benefit of all classes of buyers, and where there is one man who sells and who would therefore be injured there are thousands who are compelled to buy and who would therefore be benefited. Consequently, if these interests clash, which I do not concede, I for one feel that I must take my stand on behalf of the interest of the overwhelming majority.

I have realized before this the difficulty we are placed in in enacting general legislation. In legislating for over 90,000,000 of people, stretching from ocean to ocean and from Canada to the Gulf, it is almost utterly impossible to enact any general legislation that will not work some injury in some way to some particular parties engaged in some particular business. But, as I said, the enactment of a general parcel post will not bring the millennium to the buyers of this country. Neither will it mark the day of doom for the local country merchant.

The question to consider is, What kind of a parcel-post law ought we to pass? I do not believe, and I do not speak of it in the spirit of criticism, that the provision reported in the present bill is an adequate provision for either the buyer or the seller. Of course the extension of the international rates is right, because it harmonizes that system, makes it general throughout the country, but no one contends that it will bring any relief, because the rates would be so high that the farmers would better patronize the express companies at the present rates than resort to the postal service on those packages. It may as well be left at 16 cents a pound as to put it down to 12 cents per pound, for both are prohibitory. I want to cite a concrete example. Recently I received a letter from a friend of mine, a farmer whom I know very well, asking me to support a general parcel-post law. As one evidence of the reason for his request he inclosed a notification card which he had that day received from the express company telling him that there was in the local office for him an 11-pound package sent to him by express from Chicago, and that the charges on it were 90 cents. He denominated those charges as exorbitant, outrageous, and a robbery, and said that he hoped that I would vote for a parcel-post law that would put the express companies out of business. What could I tell him if I supported this bill and nothing further? That same package under the international rate which is provided for here, if sent by mail, would have cost him $1.32, 42 cents more than the express company was charging him, nearly 50 per cent more than the express company had charged him.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, under the general parcel-post proposition the 11 pounds would have been sent for 8 cents a pound. Is not that true?

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, no.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. I mean the one that is being advocated.

Mr. HAMLIN. Twelve cents.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. No; the one that is being advocated, the general parcel-post proposition.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, yes; I understand you now. I was speaking of the provision in this bill.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. If he had gotten his package from Chicago, even under the general parcel-post proposition which is now being advocated, he would not gain much.

Mr. HAMLIN. Only 2 cents. His 11-pound package would have cost him 88 cents instead of 90 cents.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the solution to all these vexed question lies in the matter referred to a few moments ago by my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Colorado], and that is the postal-express proposition which has been reported to this House. My time will not permit, and I frankly say that my knowledge of the subject will not warrant me, in attempting an extended discussion of that proposition, but I do want to say this in all seriousness. I believe if members of the committee will study the provisions of that bill they will reach a conclusion that that is the real solution to this small parcel transportation question which is to-day causing this country so much trouble, anxiety, and expense. I know we shy away from it, because it is a radical step, we say. It will cost some money to start it. It looks a little bit like Government ownership. When the matter was first presented to me I shied at it, and I think I betray no secret when I say that along in the month of December I was requested to introduce a postal-express bill. I considered the matter for a few days, and I shied from it like a country horse from a city automobile. I hardly knew why, only the idea of taking over the express companies of the country appeared to me to be a very big proposition, and a long step in a direction that we had not heretofore been traveling. In other words, it was radical legislation, I thought. So I finally said that I would not be willing to become responsible for the introduction of that kind of a bill until I had more time to study the subject.

I did not introduce it, but that kind of a bill was introduced, and it went to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member. We have taken up that bill and considered it. I find that it is not such a radical step, after all, but it is the step that, if carried out, will solve this whole vexed problem and that the solution will be in the interest of the people.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And does not my colleague find that as soon as he commenced to study this parcel-post question he saw that the taking over of the express business by the Post Office Department is the only real solution of it?

Mr. HAMLIN. Exactly; that is what I am saying.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And he is absolutely driven to that position from a study of the question?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am driven to that position, as I said, almost involuntarily, or, at least, contrary to my fixed ideas when I started in to study it. I thought it was a radical step, but, as the gentleman says, when you study that question thoroughly you will be driven inevitably and logically to the conclusion that the thing for the Government to do is to take over the express companies and handle the small packages and parcels through the postal department.

Now, a few years ago when we were establishing the rural free-delivery routes a great many people shied at that. Many of the local merchants over the country opposed it and said it would ruin them. Where is the Member representing a country constituency to-day who will stand up and say that he is in favor of abolishing the rural free-delivery system? Not one, and that, in my judgment, would be true after we have tried out the postal-express system, which is the solution of this vexed question. [Applause.] No popular demand is ever made for new legislation without a reason for it. What has created this great demand throughout the country for a parcel-post system? It is because the people have been robbed for years by the express companies on the shipment of small packages.

They are not demanding a parcel post to carry letters nor to carry newspapers, but it is to carry small parcels or packages which are now being carried by the express companies at a rate that is both exorbitant and unreasonable. The railroad companies some years ago, in order to relieve themselves of the duty of carrying or caring for these small packages by freight, permitted to be organized—and I have always thought participated in the organization of—companies now known as express companies, which my friend Mr. LEWIS, from Maryland, has so aptly designated as parasites, and they are nothing else.

I am informed that out of a total of over 30 companies there are only 2 incorporated.

The truth is, I repeat, that the railroads did not want to handle the little parcel and package business by freight and encouraged the organization of these express companies. Both the railroad and express companies saw in this cunningly devised scheme an opportunity to greatly increase the charges to the shipper on these small packages and thereby make money out of this kind of business.

Of course, the express companies have to hire the railroads to haul these packages for them, and the railroads required the express companies to enter into contracts with them whereby the railroad company would receive about 47½ per cent of the gross receipts of the express business for its part in hauling the packages, leaving the express companies 52½ per cent of the receipts for its part of the business. In other words, for every dollar collected by the express company the railroad company gets 47½ cents and the express company 52½ cents, and between the two the shipper gets robbed.

I think it will be interesting to note the effect of this cunningly devised contract between the railroads and express companies on the rate charged the shipper. The following will give you an idea of how it works out:

The average rate of the express companies for a 5-pound package moving 36 miles is 27 cents. In making the rate the rate maker first considered the cost of the express-company service. He found it, let us say, to be 5 cents for delivery, 6 cents for general expense, and then added 3 cents for profit—altogether 14 cents for the express company. But under the railway contract the express company is restricted to 52.50 per cent of the rate it fixes, and 47.50 per cent of the proceeds of each rate must go to the railway. Accordingly, the 14 cents computed is but 52.50 per cent of the rate he must fix; that is, he must add the railway percentage of 47.50, or 13 cents, to the express company's 14 cents, making a rate of 27 cents.

Now, let us see how this same contract works out on the long-distance haul. Let us take the coast-to-coast rates for our illustration. The rate from New York to the Pacific coast points is $13.50 per 100 pounds. Here the desirable value of the railway service must govern the rate maker. The railways receive $6.41 for their part of this service. But under the contract the express-rate maker must consider this $6.41 as but 47.50 per cent of the rate to be formed. Accordingly, he adds to the $6.41 the contractual express percentage—$7.09—and there results the $13.50 rate and its destruction of an unknown percentage of the potential express traffic.

Stated in another way, we have:

Rate for 5 pounds, 36 miles:
Necessary express loading on	$0.14
Contractual loading to pay railway	.13
Resulting rate	.27
Rate for 100 pounds, 3,000 miles:
Necessary loading to pay railway	6.41
Contractual loading for express company	7.09
Resulting rate	13.50

In brief, the railway, on the small package and short journey, at one extreme, secures 10 times what it ought, while on the other the express company accomplishes the same result. But the shipper gets robbed on both the long and short haul.

Without going into further detail, it will be seen that this small package is so heavily burdened with the expense to the shipper in its transportation that the people have risen up almost en masse and demand a parcel-post system, or some system for the moving of these small packages at a reasonable and fair cost to the shipper.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I am a member, feel that we have offered here in the Goeke bill as an amendment to the Post Office bill a solution of this vexed question.

This amendment provides for the condemnation of the property of the express companies and the taking over of the express business by the United States Government, and conducting the express business in connection with the postal service of the Government.

The Government can do this and transport these small packages at a nominal cost to the shipper and save to the people millions of dollars each year and then articulate the express service with the Rural Delivery Service and in that way put the man in the rural district in touch with the outside world in sending his produce to market by express and have his packages delivered at his door in return in the same way at a reasonable rate for the service rendered. I believe this is the logical solution of this question.

Many of the legitimate charges now added to the cost of the transportation of packages by the express companies by reason of the necessity of keeping tab on that package, entailing the employment of many clerks, can be eliminated by the Government by the affixing of a postage stamp, and our bill provides that the Postmaster General shall contract with the railroads for the hauling of these packages; and if they can not agree on a rate which is reasonable and just, then the Interstate Commerce Commission shall determine what the rate shall be and the railroads shall carry this traffic for the rate so fixed. I believe that this bill safeguards the interest of the public and is a fair solution to all the people of this parcel-transportation question and ought to be adopted.

If we can eliminate the express companies and have the Government, through the postal department, take over the transportation of these small packages by postal express and then adopt what is known as the Shackleford amendment to the Post Office bill, which provides for the Government paying the States, counties, or local communities for the use of the roads over which the mail is carried, and thereby encourage the building of good roads throughout the country, we will have done more for the common people of this country than all the previous Congresses in the last 50 years.

Since before coming to Congress I have advocated Government aid in building good roads, but I have never been willing, neither am I am now, in favor of the National Government building and controlling these roads. These roads belong to the States and should be built and controlled by the States, yet since all the money which goes into the Federal Treasury comes from the people and belongs to them, I am in favor of cutting out some of the useless expense, such as building useless battleships, costing from $12,000,000 to $18,000,000 each, and give this money to the different States to be used in the building of good roads.

I can conceive of nothing quite so beneficial to all the people, both to the town and country people as good roads. The Shackleford bill is fair to both the people and the Government in that it provides that in all the communities where they will build their roads up to either class A, B, or C, and the Government, where it uses these roads to carry the mail over them, shall pay to these communities certain annual rental for the use of these roads, to wit: Class A, $25; class B, $20; and class C, $15 a year per mile.

I am heartily in favor of this amendment, for I believe it is not only just and fair, but I believe, if adopted, we will see the greatest era of road building we have ever seen in this country.

As to the parcel-post question—as to whether it should be conducted on a flat rate or whether by zone system, or whether it would not be the wisest thing to condemn and take over the express companies and handle this class of merchandise by postal express are all large and complicated questions fraught with great expense to the Government and ought to be thoroughly thought out and investigated before adopting any special plan and the suggestion made for a committee of six, three to be appointed by the Speaker and three by the President of the Senate, to thoroughly investigate these different plans and to report by the 1st day of next December may be the best thing to do. I am thoroughly convinced that Congress must shortly work out some plan for the Government to take over the transportation of small packages and parcels, and thereby relieve the people from the oppression of the outrageous express charges, but we want to be sure that we are right before we go ahead. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I believe we ought to put the express companies out of business and establish a postal express, but if this commission, upon investigation of all these plans, reports a better one I will gladly yield. What I want is a system that will give the people transportation at reasonable prices, covering both rail and rural route, and if that can be worked out without injury to the Government I shall be satisfied.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, when the general provisions of the Post Office bill was under discussion in general debate I expressed some views on a number of different items in that measure. I had no knowledge at the time that an effort would be made to write into the bill some of the matters now under consideration, and it is regarding two of these that I propose to address the committee for a few moments. I refer to the postal-express amendment and the so-called good-roads amendment, or, as I would more properly term it, the subsidy to the States that have no good roads.

The so-called express amendment has received little consideration at the hands of any committee of this House. The Goeke bill, so-called, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I have the honor to be a member. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] appeared before the committee, and his testimony has been published. This hearing lasted hardly an hour, and that, with Senate Document No. 379, an article on the subject by the same gentleman, is the only information upon which this legislation is based. In fact, in the discussion of the bill in the committee, it was not even read through for amendment. Unquestionably the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] has made an exhaustive study of the subject and has given the House and country a great deal of information. It must appeal to every sane business man in the country that it is bordering almost on folly for the House to commit itself to legislation of this character without more information on the subject. No effort has been made to secure the information that the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Post Office Department, the Department of Commerce and Labor, or any other department of the Government might have on the subject. There has been no examination of railroad officials or express company officials for the purpose of ascertaining the value of their plants, the character of the contracts entered into between the express companies and railroad companies. If ever there was an attempt at a leap in the dark, it seems to me that this is one. As a Representative in Congress from the city of New York and interested in some of its great business affairs, I have observed to what an extent the express company enters into the daily business of the city. I have no statistics before me, nor have I any definite information on the subject, but one only has to pass through the great mercantile centers of the city to see what an important function in every-day business life the express company is called upon to fill. We are asked to vote for a proposition to attempt to take over all the express companies, their contracts with the railroads, their terminal facilities, their real estate, and—if we are to go that far—undoubtedly the immense wagon and motor transfer stations and outfits in the different cities and towns of the Nation.

Even Mr. LEWIS, who knows so much of the subject, has not informed us as to how far the Government should go in the matter of handling express matter between points in the one city. I have in mind an express company that has no contract with any railroad company that does an immense business in handling express matter between different boroughs of the city of New York and neighboring towns in New Jersey and Connecticut. This business is handled by wagons and automobiles. The company has an arrangement with the larger express companies to handle its railroad business. It has not been made clear whether a company of this character is to be condemned and taken over by the Government or whether the Government is to compete with it. I also have in mind the Long Island Express Co., New York City, that handles all the express business over the Long Island Railroad, has its terminal yard arrangements with this company in all of its many stations on Long Island. I assume that, like the larger express companies, it has a contract with the Long Island Co. This would, of course, have to be taken over with the rest.

In this discussion the other day the statement was made that about 50,000 men were employed by the express companies of the country. This is more or less of an estimate. If we are to take over these smaller companies I am certain the number would run into 100,000, if not more. I believe the statement has been made that the cost to the Government of taking over these express companies will be about $40,000,000. This statement is based on a conjecture and not a thorough investigation of the value of the property it is proposed to condemn. I have no knowledge myself, but I would not be surprised if it would be nearer $250,000,000. I have served on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the Sixty-first and Sixty-second Congresses. In that committee we have considered legislation of great magnitude, but never before have I seen an effort to secure the enactment of legislation of this importance without proper consideration. I think I voice the views of the majority of the committee when I say that we believed this measure would take weeks of consideration, and that we had not the slightest idea that an effort would be made to have it considered by special rule as an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill.

I do not object to the Government, through the Post Office Department, establishing a parcel post, an arrangement whereby the Government shall carry for a reasonable cost a limited sized package throughout the entire country, but I can not lend my support to a measure or blindly go into an expenditure that proposes to expend millions of dollars without possessing much more information on the subject. I represent, in part, the city of New York, where the main offices of all the great express companies are located. The interesting thing about this whole matter is that not a single word has been heard from an officer of any of these express companies, as far as I have been able to learn, in opposition to this measure. My honest judgment is that they will welcome it. I feel confident that when the Members of the House are called upon to vote for this proposition it will be rejected.

RELATIVE TO THE AMENDMENT SUBSIDIZING THE ROADS IN THE RURAL SECTIONS OF THE COUNTRY.

I am opposed to this amendment. I can only look upon it as an effort on the part of Members of this House to take from the Federal Treasury money for which there will be absolutely no return. I am informed that the Democratic Members of this House caucused recently whether they would bring up for consideration a public-buildings bill and that by an overwhelming majority it was determined that there would be no "pork barrel" this year. It seems to me this amendment is a better "pork barrel" than the public-buildings bill, for under the latter the towns and good-sized villages of the country through their enterprising Representatives get something for their communities from the Public Treasury. This bill will be the means of taking money from the Federal Treasury to put it into the county treasuries of every single rural county in the United States, whether or not that county has a village or town large enough to ask to get a public building, so that the rural Member can go back home and in his campaign this fall go to every county fair and to every rural community and say, "I have brought home to you so much money that you can put in your treasury and use for whatever purpose you see fit." Under the terms of this amendment not a single dollar of this money need be used in either building new roads or keeping up those already constructed. The amendment under consideration provides as follows:

That for the purposes of this act certain highways of the several States and the civil subdivisions thereof are classified as follows:

Class A shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length upon which which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide, composed of shells, vitrified brick, or macadam, graded, crowned, compacted, and maintained in such manner that it shall have continuously a firm, smooth surface, and all other roads having a road track not less than 9 feet wide of a construction equally smooth, firm, durable, and expensive, and continuously kept in proper repair. Class B shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide, composed of burnt clay, gravel, or a proper combination of sand and clay, sand and gravel, or rock and gravel, constructed and maintained in such manner as to have continuously a firm, smooth surface. Class C shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, with ample side ditches, so constructed and crowned as to shed water quickly into the side ditches, continuously kept well compacted and with a firm, smooth surface by dragging or other adequate means, so that it shall be reasonably passable for wheeled vehicles at all times. That whenever the United States shall use any highway of any State or civil subdivision thereof which falls within classes A, B, and C, for the purpose of transporting rural mail, compensation for such use shall be made at the rate of $25 per annum per mile for highways of class A, $20 per annum per mile for highways of class B, and $15 per annum per mile for highways of class C. The United States shall not pay any compensation or toll for such use of such highways other than that provided for in this section, and shall pay no compensation whatever for the use of any highway not falling within classes A, B, or C. That any question arising as to the proper classification of any road used for transporting rural mail shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture. That the compensation herein provided for shall be paid at the end of each fiscal year by the Treasurer of the United States upon warrants drawn upon him by the Postmaster General to the officers entitled to the custody of the funds of the respective highways entitled to compensation under this act.

The provisions of this paragraph shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1913.

It will be observed that the Federal Government will pay each year for every mile of roads, respectively, $15, $20, and $25; for the Class C road, described in this bill, only $15 per mile per year will be allowed. That will not hire a team and man for more than one week in the entire year to spread a few loads of dirt over the road, to be washed away at the first rainstorm.

We are all human, of course, and feel bound to have the people at home appreciate the fact that we are here and doing something for them, but I can not conceive how Members of this House can believe that their people are so simple minded as to think they are truly representing the best interests of the country when attempting to take out of the Treasury money for a purpose which it can not dispense to any good advantage. During this discussion I have asked many Members of the House, and particularly those from the South, if their State governments rendered any assistance whatever in the building of roads in the rural communities, and without exception I have been informed that the States have not contributed a single dollar. Must it not appeal to the self-respect of the Representatives here that they in all decency ought not to ask the help of the Federal Government when the States have up to this time refused to do anything for them in the matter of expenses for road building. I want to place myself squarely in favor of any measure that will tend to the building of good roads. The State of New York has taken a very strong position in this matter. About 1900 it passed an act authorizing the issuing of bonds to the extent of $50,000,000 for building roads, and the State has spent that amount of money during this past 10 years. In addition to that amount, about 35 per cent has been contributed by the respective counties of the State, so that all told, in the past 10 years, the State of New York, through its State government and respective highway county commissions, has expended in the improvement of the highways of that State approximately $70,000,000, so that to-day we have the finest system of State roads of any State in the Union—equal to any country in the world. As a further evidence of the disposition of the State of New York toward the question of road building, last year in the legislature a bill was passed authorizing the submission to the people of the State at the election this November the question of the expenditure of an additional $50,000,000 for the purpose of constructing and improving the State and county highways. This amendment will be agreed to by the people, unquestionably, and the State of New York will go on setting an example for the rest of the Union in the matter of good roads, as it has in every other great public work. In this connection I have looked up some very interesting information relative to the money spent for street improvements in the city of New York during the past 10 years, and will be pleased to submit, as part of my remarks, a memorandum containing these figures:

Memorandum relative to paving and repaving in the city of New York, 1902 to 1911, inclusive.

	Miles.
Total number of miles of streets paved during the past 10 years	392
Total number of miles of streets repaved during the past 10 years	657
Total	1,049
Total mileage of paved streets as at Dec. 31, 1911	2,145
Total mileage of unpaved streets as at Dec. 31, 1911	1,650

Repaving, 1902–1911, inclusive, charge on the whole city.

1902	$3,000,000

1904	3,300,000
1905	3,750,000
1906	3,750,000
1907	3,750,000
1908	3,000,000
1909	3,000,000
1910	2,134,000
1911	3,000,000

1910	3,595,000.00
1911	4,389,200.00
Total	36,893,690.95

It will be observed by the above figures that the city of New York has over 2,100 miles of paved streets, and that during the past 10 years it has paved 1,049 miles with the latest improved asphalt, macadam, and granite-block pavement, at a total cost of over $71,000,000, about one-half of which was paid by the city at large; the balance, being original improvements, was paid by the abutting property owners. This, indeed, is a magnificent record, and I am sure the House will approve of the disposition of the people of New York City on this very important subject. There is one thing we do protest against with all our power. The city of New York pays for all of its own paving. It contributes more than one-half toward the State's funds used for building roads in the rural sections of the State. It protests, however, against a policy that will compel it to pay a large portion of the money to be used in this "pork barrel" in an effort to mulct the Federal Treasury for the benefit of the rural communities of the country, where many of the roads are little more than a lane, hardly entitled to the name of road. We of the Republican Party, from both the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, have come to you often and asked that you help us build up a great merchant marine. You have answered "No." You come here now and ask from the Public Treasury a subsidy for your respective counties under the pretense that it is for the purpose of building roads. I said earlier in my remarks that you need not spend a single cent for the purpose after it is given you. As a test of your good faith an amendment will be offered at a proper time to include the cities of the country in the matter of road subsidy. It will be interesting to observe how many men from the rural districts in the South will vote for a proposition of this kind. The city of New York gives from its wealth to the whole country. Our State pays one-fifth of the corporation tax; it pays more than its share in the internal-revenue and customs duties levied by the Government, and willingly.

Some one has said in the debate that this amendment would not cost over $10,000,000 a year; like the cost of the Rural Free Delivery Service, it must have its beginning; that service 10 years ago cost only $2,000,000; in this bill we carry an appropriation for $43,000,000 for the rural free delivery for the next fiscal year. I predict that if this amendment prevails the appropriation for the so-called post roads within the next 10 years will cost this Government not less than $100,000,000 per annum. I trust the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, governments were instituted among men for the benefit of the people, and not the people for the benefit of the government, except to maintain order and execute its laws. So, in the legislation for a mighty people, governments are required to legislate in the interest of the whole people, enact such legislation as will prove most beneficial to the majority of the people in promoting their welfare. There has been a demand universally over the country for cheaper rates of transportation, and it has been the effort of legislation to secure cheaper transportation facilities in order that the whole people may be benefited thereby. There is no question before this Congress which gives the Members of this body more concern as to how they are to vote than the one involved in this discussion. A very large number of the people believe that the parcel post is the panacea for all their ills. On the other hand, a very large number of people believe the adoption of a parcel post will destroy their business, drive them from their vocations, and absolutely ruin them. I do not believe either of those propositions. I do not believe to the one class there will be as great a benefit as they expect, nor will there be to the other class as great an injury as they predict. Between these widely divergent views there is a golden mean which should be ascertained and adopted, in order that justice may be done to all and the best interests of the public served. Some happy medium must be found and adopted in order that the impositions now borne by the public shall be removed and a system inaugurated which will adequately serve the public at a moderate cost. Between these two extreme positions Members are compelled to meet the proposition and solve the problem so that the greatest good for the whole people may, if possible, be secured. If none of the plans proposed will produce this result and if some other feasible plan is proposed which will do so, then I shall advocate and vote for it. Whatever proposition assures the greatest benefit to the greatest number in promoting the prosperity, the welfare, of a mighty people shall have my unqualified support.

This question, in my judgment, is of such paramount importance that it calls for the serious consideration of each and every Member of this body in order that such legislation may be enacted as the result of this deliberation that relief may be had from the extortions of the carriers of small packages imposed on a helpless people. The burdens now borne by them for the want of relief from these merciless transportation companies are stifling production, limiting consumption, and restricting the employment of our great capacities with which a generous nature has so abundantly endowed us. As the matter now stands, three distinct propositions are before this House for consideration, namely, the one proposed by the Post Office Committee, a parcel post limited to 11 pounds at 12 cents a pound flat rate; the one known as the Sulzer plan for parcels up to 11 pounds at 8 cents per pound flat rate; and the other known as the Lewis plan or Goeke bill to establish a postal express carrying packages up to a hundred pounds at a rate to be fixed at less than that now charged by the express companies doing similar service, providing for the condemnation of all the property of all the express companies in the United States, and the Government taking such of the properties as it may need for the conduct of the business, if the same can be had at its fair and reasonable value, and to become effective July 1, 1913.

In my judgment the Lewis plan is the proper solution of this very important question and the one that will afford relief from the evil now visited upon the people. To this postal-express system couple the rural route delivery and the parcel-post project is complete at a reasonable price, one that the people can afford to patronize and one which will prove advantageous to producer and consumer alike, and for the benefit of all classes of people and all kinds of business. It will discriminate against none and give no advantage to one that it does not give to another.

Members of this House are restless over this subject, because they know the people are watching how they vote on this question. The Member who votes against the postal-express plan, in my judgment, will have more trouble during the coming campaign explaining to his people why he voted against such a meritorious measure than any other vote he will cast in this Congress. It will not be sufficient to say he did so because he supported one of the parcel-post plans. In that event he will be told that in each of them the rates are so high that they can not patronize them and hence they will afford no relief. Such an explanation will not suffice. He will be told by his constituency that in supporting the proposed parcel post that the rates are prohibitive, and that it does not furnish a remedy for the existing evils in the transportation of small packages, and hence conditions would not be benefited but, on the contrary, aggravated.

Investigation shows that the freight charge for the average ton is $1.90; the express charge for the average ton of parcels is $31.20, based on the average distance of 196 miles. Under the Sulzer plan it would cost $160 per ton and under the plan proposed by the committee at 12 cents per pound it would amount to $240 per ton. Does any person flatter himself with the belief that any shipments of any consequence would be made by parcel post if either of these were adopted? The rates are prohibitive, and the express companies would go on charging their exorbitant rates, and the condition of the public would remain unchanged. The exorbitant rates are charged on small packages and this is the evil which demands an adequate remedy. If a reduction is made in transportation charges both producer and consumer would be benefited. Whatever the reduction it will increase the price of the producer and reduce the cost to the consumer, and will inure to the advantage of both. The cheaper the commodity the more universal its consumption, and hence as the cost to carry it from the producer to the consumer is lessened, the amount to be carried is proportionately increased. But the charge provided for in each of the proposed parcel-post plans will not relieve the existing condition, as the charges are prohibitive. The major portion of the commodities which it is expected would be transported are not worth the cost of the transportation at present charges and hence they must waste on the producer's hands and the consumer be denied their use. Naturally the profits of the former are reduced and the wants of the latter are denied.

Another serious objection to each of these plans proposed is the flat rate. The charge is just the same for a short haul as for a long haul—just as much to be transported for 10 miles as for 3,000 miles. This feature is indefensible, and the effect of it would be that the express companies will get the short-haul business and the Government will get the long-haul business. Suppose a person had an 11-pound package to be sent from Washington to Alexandria, Va., a distance of 10 miles. It would cost by the Sulzer plan 88 cents; by the other plan, $1.32; but it could be sent by express for 25 cents. Which would the party select to transport it? But suppose he desired to send it to San Francisco; by the parcel post it would cost the same price, but by express it would cost three or four dollars, and in such case he would select the parcel post, because it would be cheaper. In the event of the adoption of either of the proposed plans the Government would get the long hauls, which are the expensive ones, and the express companies the short hauls, which are the profitable ones, and the exorbitant charges would remain as they are now. But if the postal-express plan is adopted then a reduction in cost for small packages up to 100 pounds can be secured, and beneficial results to all classes and to all businesses alike will result and a stimulus to prosperity will be furnished and the great public demand satisfied. By its adoption, as proposed in the Goeke bill, the rates can be reduced from those now charged by the express companies about 40 per cent, and carry out the existing contracts which they now have with the railroads, which are, as all know, unreasonably exorbitant. It proposes the elimination of express companies as common carriers, because they are merely parasites in the transportation business, and transfer that business to the Post Office Department, where it properly belongs. If the parcel post up to 11 pounds belongs to that department, then the whole of it does. If not, why not?

The objection urged by some to its adoption is that it is an innovation in conditions existing and would involve the Government in a business venture which might complicate affairs in its administration for the public welfare. But a sufficient answer to this objection is that it is already in the common-carrier business and is proposing to go more extensively into it by the adoption of a parcel-post system. This, then, is only on a more extensive plan, one that will really benefit the public. It is a difference in degree only and not in principle. But another objection is that it is pledging this Nation to the policy of Government ownership. Our answer to that objection is that it is already pledged to it, if this would pledge it, and has been ever since the present Post Office Department was established. The Government owns its mail bags, its wagons, its horses, its buildings, its repair shops, and the equipment now necessary to operate the system, and this addition would only enlarge the system and extend its functions and therefore require more paraphernalia to carry out its new-formed functions. It would not involve the adoption of any new extension of powers, but only the broader use of those already employed.

Another objection urged is that it would involve the expenditure of a large sum of money as a compensation for the express properties or the purchase of new ones, but this contention can not be sustained by the facts, and if the parcel post is established it also will require a large expenditure to place it in operation—the purchase of vehicles, horses, motors, furniture, and other equipment, and the employment of additional help—equally as much as to institute the postal express. Either will involve the outlay of capital.

Here is a statement made to the Government by all the express companies as to the value of their properties:

Assets.

Expenditures for real property	$14,932,169.94
Expenditures for equipment	7,381,405.59
Stocks owned	40,912,980.55
Funded debt owned	45,955,672.54
Other permanent investments	25,438,584.11
Cash and current assets	33,682,608.88
Materials and supplies	138,210.78
Sinking, insurance, and other funds	128,491.83
Advance payments on contracts	5,836,666.67
Franchises, good will, etc	10,877,369.74
Other assets	846,090.33
Profit and loss	91,129.58
Total assets	186,221,380.54

Of the above assets what a small amount is actually employed in the prosecution of the business, and what a small amount the Government would require in taking over the business necessary to operate it.

It would need the equipment valued at:

Equipment	$7,381,405.15
Materials and supplies	138,210.78
Total	7,519,615.93

Would anyone contend that a parcel-post system could be established for less? The rest of its assets are not employed in the operation of the business and not necessary to its operation. They are investments, outside of its carrier business, to earn profits; the employment of capital realized from the business. They could dispose of these as they desired. With them the Government would have nothing to do. But it has been said that they will unload their "old junk" on the Government. Not so; if they would not sell at a reasonable price then the Government would buy new elsewhere. As a business proposition it is a good one. These companies earned in the operation of the express business for the year ending June 30, 1911, $152,555,521. Out of every dollar collected from the operation of the express business they pay the railroads for express privileges 47½ cents, which amounted for the year 1911 to $73,829,450. After paying every charge connected with all the business of every kind and character they had a net surplus of $10,326,352 for dividends. With less than $14,000,000 engaged in the actual express business it therefore appears that it is a very attractive business venture.

The express companies, not like railroads, own no lines for transportation, but, like the Government in carrying the mails, employ the railroads and other carriers to transport the articles they undertake to carry. They are now operating over 270,668 miles.

They did not have to invest millions of dollars before they could earn a dollar, but they earned from small investments at the start and with the profits added to their equipment from time to time as business required. They represent practically nothing in original investment. Unlike railroads, they have no franchises, no rights of way, no terminals, no yards, and require no permanent improvements in order to conduct their business. Chattels alone will answer all their requirements. Their business relation to the public is purely parasitic in character. Shall we refuse legislation for 93,000,000 people demanding relief from these parasites because of the fear that some may characterize this procedure as a step in the direction of Government ownership—a step which has already been taken—deny an imperative requirement, and stifle the prosperity of the Nation? If we do, on what ground will we justify our action when we appear before the people at the bar of public opinion to render an account of our official conduct? Will not an angry, if not an injured, constituency pass an adverse judgment upon our public service?

Does not the Government now own and operate its own transports engaged in carrying passengers and freight? Does it not appropriate yearly enormous sums to improve rivers and harbors? Does it not own the Panama Canal, Panama Railroad, operate it and steamers in connection with it? Does it not own and operate its revenue cutters and its battleships? Has not this Government for years been following the policy of building two battleships a year at enormous cost? Is it not preaching peace by words and preparing for war by acts? Millions yearly are appropriated for the public defense, much of which is absolutely wasted; but here is a successful business proposition which will materially promote the prosperity of the entire country, benefit all, and injure none. Shall we adopt it or shall we turn it down? The question is now up to the membership of this House for disposition. If adopted, it will promote the arts of peace, stimulate prosperity, relieve the masses of an enormous burden, and measurably reduce the high cost of living.

Mr. Chairman, the objection of Government ownership should not prevail now against this meritorious proposition and against the imperative demand for relief coming from all sections of the country against the unreasonable charges extorted by the express companies from the people and the necessities existing for cheaper and better facilities for transporting small packages. Congress is called upon to act, to act promptly, and to act efficiently, and if it fails to respond to public requirements in this respect the people will hold it to account for its neglect of duty. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SAUNDERS having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution relative to the rebuilding of certain levees on the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Sixty-second Congress, I have always been in favor of Federal aid for post-road improvement. Every civilized country in the world except ours has long ago committed itself to it. I made a speech on the subject in Congress in 1910 in support of the bill I then had pending. I have had a bill pending for Federal aid to post roads ever since I came here. There were few of us then. I am proud there are so many of us now.

When our forefathers made the Federal Constitution and said in terms as explicit as words can be written the following:

SEC. 8. The Congress shall have power to establish post offices and post roads—

it is my opinion that they expected the Congress of the United States to do that thing. We were then a handful of people. To-day we are a world power, with 92,000,000 people. From 1806 to 1838 the Congress of the United States appropriated from the public funds all told $7,000,000, and since that they have appropriated for every conceivable thing excepting good roads. I am glad that the good roads advocates joined hands, and shoulder to shoulder are in the very act of forcing this legislation onto this Post Office bill as a rider. It will enhance its chances to avoid being slaughtered at the other end of this Capitol, where they would interpose their usual finespun lack of logic and would in all probability defeat the legislation.

On March 14, 1818, Congress passed the following act:

Resolved, That Congress has power under the Constitution to appropriate money for the construction of post roads, military and other roads, and of canals, and for the improvement of waterways.

Under these authorities just cited we have dug the Panama Canal, at an approximate cost of $400,000,000. Under these authorities we have appropriated approximately $725,000,000 for the improvement of the waterways of the country. I ask you why you have answered these two demands, which help part of the people some and part of the people a great deal, and ignored completely the one that is of the deepest interest and concern to all of the people. Why shrug your shoulders behind vague and fine-spun technicalities when the rights of all of the plain people become involved? Why will you always neglect the plain citizen, who has not in the past, does not now, and will not in the future maintain any lobby here or elsewhere in his behalf? Why ignore the man who has not the opportunity to get your ear or look into your face? His trust is supreme, and your efforts, in turn, should know no bounds while he seeks justice at your hand.

The Democratic platform made in Denver in 1908—and, by the way, our last one—has a paragraph which reads as follows:

We favor Federal aid to State and local authorities in the construction and maintenance of post roads.

This language in our last platform seems unusually plain. It is not in hieroglyphics or in terms of innuendo or uncertainty. It says what we favor as a party in our platform. It says what we favor on the stump. I am one of those who believe in doing right here in Congress what we said we would do in platform and on the stump. How can the people who send us here trust us if we advocate one thing on the stump and in our platforms and do another thing when in power? The Republicans have legislated themselves out of power on that very program. Let us not conclude from some fine-spun hypothetical case that we should not grant the people some relief when their demand seems almost universal and our pledge was in fact universal.

Fortunately, we are not without modern authority on the subject of Federal aid for post roads. Cooley, on Constitutional Law—and his worth as a law writer will not, I think, be questioned by lawyer or layman—says:

Every road within a State, including railroads, turnpikes, and navigable streams, existing or created within a state becomes a post road whenever by the action of the Post Office Department provision is made for the transportation of the mails upon or over it.

I shall not longer deal with the flimsy charges of "lack of power" or the unconstitutionality of Federal aid for the post highways of the country. It is my firm belief that no lawyer and only uninformed laymen will longer disagree with me as to the powers of the Federal Government to do the thing we are doing.

RURAL-ROUTE ADVOCATES WERE SCOFFED AT AT THE BEGINNING.

In 1897, when the American Congress made the first appropriation of $40,000 for aid in the establishment of a rural delivery of the mails, the idea was scoffed at, and it was then by many of the Members of Congress and citizens outside of Congress deemed a wild orgy of speculation—was characterized as a bubble unworthy of solution, totally impossible of accomplishment.

The advocates of the measure were jeered at and complained of and charged with all sorts of paternalism; all sorts of criticism was hurled at them. To-day how changed. None so poor as to do the opponents reverence. To-day this Congress is appropriating $43,000,000 for rural routes, and everyone sanctions the appropriation. No one now says it is paternalism. No one now complains of it as a bubble. No one would repeal it if he could. No one could repeal it if he would.

I tell you, sir, dear as the rural route is to the American farmer, dearer yet to him is the subject of highway improvement. All the civilized countries of the world have acted and become thoroughly committed to it. You may refuse it to-day, but this question will not end. This question will not down.

I am not a paternalist. I do not want the Federal Government to trespass upon the rights of the States or override one of their prerogatives; but I tell you, sirs, there must be more of the benefits of Government going to all of the people within and less of the benefits going to a few of the people both within and without, or complaints and criticisms will increase rather than diminish.

GOVERNMENT GRANTS TO RAILWAYS OWNED BY THE FEW.

This Government has granted 159,125,734 acres of the public domain to the railroads of the country to encourage them in railway building. This acreage, at $10 per acre, would be and amount to an appropriation of $1,591,257,340 of the people's money. This was the granting away of homes for 3,988,143 American families of 40 acres each. This was not for the benefit of all of the people and to remain their own, but was for the direct benefit of the railways, to become their private property, and, at best, only for the indirect benefit of all of the rest of us.

I hope I may not be egotistical in saying no grant of land to any railway for any purpose has been made by Congress since the Democrats came into power. Again I hope it will be at least pardonable to say that not one grant of public land has been made to any railroad since I was appointed on the Public Lands Committee, which is the sole committee having to do with the making of such grants. I hope it will not be the part of a bigot to assert that so long as I remain a member of that committee there shall be no more grants without a minority report and a protest from me in the committee, on the floor of the House, to the President, and to the press. No longer shall Congress be heard to grant without protest the heritage of the children here and those unborn. Subsidies may be correct, necessary, and proper in certain cases, but surely not longer should the land which shall be the future homes of our boys and girls be granted to railways, who will monopolize them, extort inhuman prices for them, and otherwise make the acquirement of an American home impossible.

WATERWAYS AND THE AMOUNTS APPROPRIATED FOR THEM.

This Government has been generous with the waterways of the country. We passed through this House this very Congress for the improvement of the waterways of the country $26,262,520.50, and I presume the Senate will double that amount before the bill becomes a law. We of the inland and the high, dry, streamless prairies of the West did not assume a narrow view of the matter and oppose you or seek to oppose you, but, on the contrary, we supported you. I ask with what consistency or propriety can you "deep-waterway Members," who have had so much done for you, so grudgingly grant relief, not alone to us but you as well? This assistance at the hands of the Government is not local but universal instead. This amendment ought to be adopted by a unanimous vote. That it will be adopted by a large majority is the prediction of its friends and the solemn admission of its enemies.

FEDERAL AID FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Our generous Government has appropriated for the construction of Federal buildings throughout the Republic the sum of $247,473,374, which have benefited the particular local communities in which the buildings are located. It, of course, has been of service likewise to the Government where they have to maintain offices, but I think there are comparatively few who will contend that their virtues are as equally distributed or of such general concern as the improvements of the roads that are the property of us all. I think there must be few who would not agree that one is general and the other, at best, local. One has been neglected and one has been cared for. The fight of the "good-roads" advocates stands on the wholesome foundation of fairness. Oppose it and scorn it if you will; it is but the common fate of everything that is new, however righteous and just it may be. If it does not come now it will come soon. I think it will pass this House to-day.

ARMY AND NAVY APPROPRIATIONS ALL OUT OF PROPORTION.

The Federal Government has appropriated for the last 10 fiscal years the enormous sum of $2,091,848,793.18 for the support of the Army and Navy. I am not now, have never been in the past, and can not conceive of any state of mind in the future when I would criticize this Government for appropriating a sufficient amount to maintain our safety and protection and self-respect at all times; but in times of profound peace, with not a war cloud in sight, I fear we have made haste with the people's money for War and Navy appropriations at unwarranted speed. Let us ever keep the fires of patriotism blazing in the heart of the citizen from light burdens and light taxes, rather than to stand with uplifted musket ready to strike him down because he complains that his burdens are more than he can stand. Let me again assert that the best defense any country can have is a happy, prosperous, and contented people. A just distribution of the blessings of government for internal improvements is the surest way to accomplish it. The American people are interested more in roads than in armament, more in roads than in militia, more in driveways than in muskets, more in fair treatment than in brute force.

The American Congress is appropriating too much for war and too little for peace. The American Congress is appropriating too much for war and too little for agriculture and internal improvements.

The increase in the average appropriations for Army and Navy for the eight years succeeding the War with Spain over the eight preceding years is $1,072,000,000. This increase for the last eight years would, if you please, expend under the cooperative plan $2,000 on every mile of post road in the United States and leave in the Treasury for extension more than $97,000,000. The 90,000,000 American people have the right to ask, Would not the latter expenditure on roads benefit all more than the increase in annual appropriations for war or navy? The people have a right to your reply. This eight-year increase exceeds the national debt by $158,000,000.

It exceeds the entire expense of the Government for the whole year of 1910.

It is three times the estimated cost of the Panama Canal.

It is more than the entire irrigation projects planned for the next generation.

It is $60 for every family in the United States. Interest on this increase for the past eight years at 8 per cent would yield $2,000 per year to every family making up a city of 200,000 population.

Our defenses prior to 1898 were adequate, and why not presume that they are adequate now? No war clouds hover around or about us. Why not spend this enormous increase on internal improvements and legislate the hearts of this country closer to the Government by light burdens, rather than drive them away with heavy burdens? Four hundred million dollars annually for war and navy and $10,000,000 for agriculture is all out of proportion and will not operate to cement us together, but will drive us apart. It will unnecessarily tax us beyond our endurance. It will burden us for things we do not need. It will necessitate neglect of things we do need. How wrong it is to appropriate so much for war and so little for industry and peace. One appropriation makes widows and orphans, while one feeds hungry mouths and clothes threadbare limbs.

One is to maim and kill, the other brings peace, progress, and success.

War places homes in ashes. Peace and industry build homes instead of hovels.

One unites families in patriotism and love, the other dissipates and disrupts the home.

One adds to love of country and patriotism, the other to bluster, heartaches, disaster, and want.

I tell you such inequities can not go on without my protest. I tell you, sir, if this extravagance does not cease, my protest will be the protest of the many. [Applause.]

OPPONENTS CHARGE IMPOSSIBILITY OF ACCOMPLISHMENT.

This charge is a general one, but I meet it squarely and join issue with them squarely, that it is not impossible of performance and will submit some statistics that I think will please the friends of good roads and will at least amaze our enemies. Comparison is a wholesome rule. It brings to light the good and bad there is in any proposition and stands them naked side by side.

There are in the Republic to-day 42,169 rural routes of an average length of 24 miles each. This makes an aggregate mileage of 1,012,056 miles of rural routes all told. It is fair to assume that at least one-fourth of them have been improved by the States or do not need improving, so we may take as a basis three-fourths of the total mileage of 759,042 miles of routes that need improvement. I think it is safe to say that there is no State in the Union which would not expend one-half of the cost of the improvement at an estimated cost of $2,000 per mile. Hence the Federal Government would only have to expend $1,000 per mile on a total mileage, or $759,042,000 all told. It will be observed if the amount of $725,000,000 heretofore expended for waterways it would have improved the rural routes of the United States lacking the price of two battleships. I tell you, sirs, the improvement of the post roads of this country is not an impossibility but a burning necessity instead.

Again it will be observed that the approximate cost of the construction of the Panama Canal of $400,000,000 would improve more than half of the post highway in the country.

Again we will observe that if we appropriate the same amount for road improvement each year that we have appropriated annually for the last five years for waterways, every route in the United States will be converted into a turnpike.

Again we must observe that if we had used the amount of $247,473,374 heretofore appropriated for public buildings on the highways over which post roads are established and would appropriate an equivalent amount each year for three succeeding years, every route in the country would be provided for and the Republic would not be in bankruptcy. The public would not complain, but would rejoice instead.

Again, we must observe with some degree of alarm the expenditures of the Government for war and Navy for the purpose of this comparison. The amount we have used for Army and Navy the last three years would improve every post road now in existence and leave a balance of $76,730,516.37 for extensions and improvements. One-half of the annual appropriation would keep them in repair and make the necessary extensions as the routes increased.

I might at the risk of being tedious with comparisons show how well able this Republic, with her 90,000,000 patriotic people, can afford to undertake this improvement, but it seems quite sufficient to know that every other civilized country of the world has begun to turn their attention to the improvement of post roads, are thoroughly committed to it; that we, at the very foot of the class, have power to do it legally and within the Constitution. Why falter? Why wait?

Let the rural routes be extended, and also the roads over which the faithful carrier daily travels. Let the daily paper be each night handed to the farmer, with tired muscles and limbs, but with rested brain. Let the mail go to him and to his family, and the education and golden results that it accomplishes flow to him free and untrammeled. It is worth more to us in war, as well as in peace, to have a prosperous, patriotic people, free from excessive taxes from without and more internal improvements from within. This law is for the plain people, who will defend us in time of war, who will feed us in times of peace. This service must never be reduced, but rather extended and increased. Carve other appropriations. Yea, carve them all rather than to touch one hair in the head of this appropriation for the producers of this country.

Let the ignorant be educated. Let the weak be made strong. Let equal rights to all and special privileges to none ever be the watchword and the glory of this Nation of nations.

Every heart swells with pride when we point to the sisterhood of States as standing at the very head of all the nations of the earth in power and in greatness. But how it must wound the pride of every true American to admit that with all our zeal, our energy, and ambition we stand at the very bottom when it comes to the improvement of our post roads. England, France, Germany, Belgium, and all of the civilized nations of the earth have improved their highways, and here we are faltering and waiting and neglecting a duty we owe to the country and to all. Finespun constitutional objections will not answer this almost universal demand of the people. It is not sound even as a purely legal objection.

IMPROVE THE ROADS AND DRIVE THE BOYS BACK TO THE FARMS.

One of the greatest dangers that to-day haunt the American people is the universal desire of the American boy to leave the farm and go to the bright lights of the cities and the crowded centers. This mania is not without a reason, and that reason is apparent to us all. With bad roads, the boy or girl living in the rural communities is denied the use of the higher education that goes with the city school and that is impossible in the country schools where the country is sparsely settled. It denies the country boy or girl the churches, the libraries, the theaters, and places of amusement. With improved post roads and highways this distance will be annihilated, this evil will be remedied, and the farmer's daughter and son, respectively, will share in the benefits that their industry and frugality so richly entitle them to.

These conditions are some of the things that is allowing the farm to grow up in weeds; these are the conditions that make the cost of living so extremely high; these are the evils that will cause this Nation to retrograde if not changed, and it is the duty of this Congress to adopt our amendment to this bill.

To improve the highways and allow them the advantages offered by the city will but make their race for the good things in life equal. It must be equal to get best results.

I again repeat: Give the farmer's son and daughter a chance to attend the churches, the libraries, the theaters, the colleges, and their frugality, their industry, and earnestness of manner will but win for them the success that their efforts, industry, frugality, and intelligence have long entitled them to.

Improve the highways and make farm life more attractive and the congested conditions in the great centers will cease, and the farmer's son will take his back track and again take up his avocation on the farm with a light heart and willing hands. It can but result in good to all. It will increase the scope of employment in the cities and towns. It will increase the Nation's wealth. It will develop the bald prairies of the West and convert plain and forest into a garden of homes, and the world will prosper and improve as it has never done before.

The consumer can live more cheaply and care for wife and baby better. The farmer, with farm under a high state of cultivation, can produce and market more products at a greater profit. The products of the farm, the mine, and the forest can be brought to the door of the factory, and the world will be made brighter and better from every aspect.

Let us not neglect the old homestead until it grows up in the weeds of neglect. Let us not be unmindful of the adage, old but true, "That you may tear down the cities and towns of this Nation and willing hands will rebuild them, but forsake the farm and disaster will ensue." In order that we have cities we must first have farms. In order that we have farms we must have markets. In order to have markets we must have transportation. In order to have transportation we must have roads. I tell you, sir, we must have both State and Nation working together and in unison and in accord on this all-important subject of highway improvement.

MORE INTERNAL AND LESS EXTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS ARE NEEDED.

We must spend more within and less without. Improve the conditions within and we will have no fears from without. Make the improvements for those who are here to-day secure and make them more secure to those who are to follow us. Money spent on internal improvements, thereby enhancing the wealth of the Nation, insuring peace among ourselves, is the salvation of the Republic. Practicing this, patriotism will ever increase and never wane as the years speed by.

Internal improvements, in which the plain people have a deep and immediate interest rather than a remote one will do more to keep us a happy, closely united, and contented people than all the subsidies paid to railroads, to mail ships and steamships, to tariff subsidies, and high duties laid on the one least able to bear and for the benefit of the class least in need. I tell you, sir, the American people will not sit idly by and be ground down by inequalities and inequities for which you can give no good or adequate answer. I tell you, sir, in a Republic where all are free and equal you shall not trample down the many for the glories of the few.

Hundreds of millions for war and navy annually and not one cent for improvement of the highways and post roads of the country will not satisfy them when they know, and they shall know as long as such injustice and inequality prevails.

I tell you, sir, appropriations ranging from twenty-five to forty millions annually for waterways and not one cent for post roads will not satisfy them when they know, and the truth will out.

Millions for post offices and public buildings for a few towns of the country and no assistance for the post roads and the little towns will not satisfy them. It will not square with frank, fair, and honest treatment.

A billion-dollar session of an Aldrich-Cannon-Republican Congress and not one cent for post roads or internal improvements did not satisfy the producers, who send abroad annually $600,000,000 in products from their toil, zeal, and industry, thereby replenishing our Treasury to the brim. They sent a Democratic House in their stead, expecting us to act.

Republican Congresses of the past have arranged tariff schedules for the manufacturer, so that his riches are greater than he ever anticipated. They have subsidized the railroads with land grants until they have grown corpulent with wealth. They have increased the appropriations for the war and navy until the patience of this citizenship is almost exhausted, and now, when asked to do something for the plain citizen, who produces more every year than he himself consumes, they answer with the words "economy" or "unconstitutionality." It is no answer, and you shall not plead it. The masks shall be torn from your faces, and the taxpayer shall know the truth. He shall know whether you favor good roads or bad roads, shall know whether you are in favor of repopulating the farms or allowing them to grow up in weeds, shall know whether or not you are in favor of reducing the cost of living for the consumer and increase the profit of the producer.

I tell you every civilized country is aiding in road building save our own. Why should this fair Republic, with her 92,000,000 industrious, clear-headed people, longer delay such a universal blessing? Why should we longer delay in such a universal demand from the people in all the walks of life. We of the inland do not oppose your coast protection and coast defense merely because we do not live on the coast. We of the prairies do not oppose the improvement of the rivers because we have no rivers. Why and with what consistency can New York and other Members become so effervescent and cry out against this bill? Simply because their States have improved a part of their roads at State expense. Good roads are the property of all. We should all unselfishly go about their improvement. All should share in their upbuilding. All can use them together. All can enjoy them together. It will add to the beauty, grandeur, and usefulness of the entire country.

Good roads bring the products of the mine and forest to the factory door.

Good roads bring thrift to the farmer, thrift to the consumer, and wealth to the Nation.

Good roads make farm life pleasant, profitable, and enhances

Good roads will bring us more rural routes—will bring us better ones and more efficient ones.

They make better homes, happier firesides, more patriotic people.

They are the avenues of progress and the highest and best proof of the intelligence we enjoy.

It does justice to producer and consumer and withholds injustice from all.

They save time, labor, money, and failure. They patronize the railways and the waterways you have appropriated for so lavishly.

Highways, I tell you, sir, are not the property of any one man or class of men, but are the property and the interest of everyone, whether he be black or white, educated or uneducated, weak or strong, high or low, savage or civilized. They are the property of us all, and we should all aid in their upbuilding.

The beneficent effects of good roads flow to the city and the hamlet as well as to the farmer. They walk hand in hand in community of interest, and surely it is a picture beautiful to look upon and sound at the core.

Good roads are indispensable to our growth and progress and we must not falter or wait to provide for them. [Applause.]

Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM,
Care the Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Under separate cover, the Illinois Branch of the National League for Medical Freedom has forwarded to you petitions protesting against the passage of Senate bill No. 1, known as the Owen bill. The bill, as you know, creates an independent health service, to which are transferred three branches of existing departments.

The Illinois members of the National League for Medical Freedom believe the Owen bill to be a dangerous measure, and trust that you will use your best efforts to defeat its passage. You are respectfully requested to read the protest of the Illinois branch into the RECORD and to present the petitions to the honorable United States Senate.

Yours, truly,

ILLINOIS BRANCH OF THE NATIONAL LEAGUE FOR MEDICAL FREEDOM,
JOSEPH C. MASON, Secretary.

Mr. CULLOM. I also present a number of telegrams in the nature of memorials, remonstrating against the passage of the same bill, which I ask may lie on the table and be noted in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented a petition of 21 citizens of Waterville and Fairfield, in the State of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I present a memorial numerously signed by members of the Arkwright Club of New England, remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called Covington amendment to the bill to regulate the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal. I have received a number of these memorials, and I ask that one of them be printed in the RECORD, omitting the signatures.

There being no objection, the memorials were referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and the body of one of the memorials was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, the undersigned, members of the Arkwright Club, being actively interested in the manufacture of cotton goods in New England, understand that the Covington amendment, so called, to the bill now before Congress regulating the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal provides that "it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier, subject to the act to regulate commerce, to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in any common carrier by water with which said railroad does or may compete for traffic."

We believe in the regulation of common carriers by the Government and in the authority granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We do not, however, believe in such restriction or limitation of investment in or the development of steamship lines or coastwise trade generally as this amendment provides.

We deem it especially important for the great industries of New England that under proper restrictions railroads should be allowed to develop and maintain transportation by water. This is of the utmost importance in the transportation of the freight to and from New England points and the South, especially in connection with the cotton industry. We believe that, with the opening of the Panama Canal, it is of greatest importance that there shall be adequate transportation facilities by water between New England and the Gulf cities.

Therefore, we protest against the adoption of the Covington amendment to the Panama Canal bill as unnecessarily impeding the development of transportation by water and as thus retarding the development of New England's commerce with southern and Pacific ports, and we urge New England Congressmen to do everything in their power to defeat the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of the Business Men's Association of Norwich, Conn., praying for the adoption of 1-cent letter postage, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of New Haven, Conn., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the so-called Panama Canal bill, which will require the segregation of railroads from their connecting steamboat lines, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. CATRON. I present Senate joint memorial No. 1 of the First Legislature of New Mexico, memorializing Congress to enact the so-called relief homestead law. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIRST LEGISLATURE,
State of New Mexico.

Senate joint memorial 1, memorializing the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America to pass relief homestead law. Designation in particular United States Senate bill No. 3367, which passed the Senate February 5, 1912, and is now before the House of Representatives.

Whereas the homesteaders in New Mexico who occupy that portion of the State known as the dry-farming sections have found themselves at a great disadvantage in trying to make a living upon their homesteads for the first few years of settlement unless they absent themselves from such homesteads for a considerable portion of the time that they may find employment elsewhere; and

Whereas United States Senate bill No. 3367, entitled "An act to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to homesteads," which passed the Senate of the United States on February 5, 1912, is now before the House of Representatives for the consideration of that body; and

Whereas the above-mentioned act provides for final proof with three years' residence and permits absence from the homestead for six months out of the year; and

Whereas such law would result in great benefit to the homesteaders and the State of New Mexico by making the acquiring of homesteads here more practical and thus encouraging the immigration of home builders. Now, therefore, the First Legislature of the State of New Mexico respectfully requests the passage of the above-mentioned act now pending in Congress: Now be it further

Resolved, That the presiding officers of each house of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico are hereby directed to forward to the President of the United States and the presiding officers and Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States copies of this memorial.

E. C. DE BACA,
President of Senate.
JOHN JOERNS,
Chief Clerk of Senate.
ROMAN L. BACA,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
FRANK STAPLIN.
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Approved, April 9, 1912.

Governor of the State of New Mexico.

Riley, secretary of the Indiana Grain Dealers' Association, praying for the passage of the so-called Pomerene bill relating to bills of lading in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GREENVILLE, N. C., April 25, 1912.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

We regard Owen bill relative public health, pending before Senate for enactment, and similar legislation a menace to welfare and freedom of the American people. We hope you will use your great influence against it.

BARROOM LICENSES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5461) governing the granting of licenses for barrooms in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That no person, company, copartnership, association, club, or corporation shall manufacture, sell, offer for sale, keep for sale, traffic in, barter, exchange for goods, give away, or otherwise furnish, in the District of Columbia, any intoxicating liquors, except as hereinafter provided. Wherever the term "intoxicating liquors" is used in this act it shall be deemed to include whisky, brandy, gin, wine, cordials, rum, ale, porter, beer, hard or fermented cider, and all other fermented, distilled, spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors, and every mixture of liquors which shall contain more than 2 per cent, by weight, of alcohol, and any mixture of liquor which shall contain less than 2 per cent of alcohol, if the same shall be intoxicating.

SEC. 2. That there shall be, and is hereby, constituted an excise board for the District of Columbia, which shall be composed of three members, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall serve for a term of three years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified, except that the members first appointed shall serve for one, two, and three years, respectively, as may be designated by the President, or until their successors are appointed and qualified. The salary of said commissioners shall be at the rate of $2,400 per annum.

Hereafter no license shall be issued to a hotel having less than 50 bedrooms for guests, nor to any hotel the character of which, or the character of the proprietor of which, is deemed objectionable by said board.

No saloon or barroom, other than in hotels and clubs, shall be licensed, allowed, or maintained within 150 feet of any other saloon or barroom.

No saloon, barroom, or other place where intoxicating liquor is sold at retail shall be licensed, allowed, or maintained nearer than 300 feet of any alleyway occupied for residences or of places commonly called slums.

No saloon, barroom, or other place wherein intoxicating liquor is sold at retail or wholesale, other than hotels and clubs, shall be licensed, allowed, or maintained within 600 feet of any public schoolhouse, private school, college, or university, or within 500 feet of any place of religious worship, measured between the nearest entrances to each by the shortest course of travel between such places of business and public schoolhouse, private school, college, or university, or place of religious worship.

No license shall be granted to sell intoxicating liquors in the waiting room of any station or depot of any steam or electric railroad or other carrier for the transportation of passengers within the District of Columbia.

No license shall be granted for the establishment or maintenance of a barroom or other place for the sale of intoxicating liquors in any residence portion of the District of Columbia; and it shall be the duty of the excise board to determine in the case of each application for licenses whether the location where the barroom is to be located is or is not within the business portion of the District, and if not the license shall be denied; and the excise board is hereby authorized and required to determine in each case what is so far devoted to business as to constitute it a business street or section: Provided, That no license shall be granted for any saloon or barroom on any side of any square, block, or tract of land where less than 50 per cent of the houses and buildings, not including saloons or hotels and clubs having barroom licenses under this act, thereon are used for business purposes; and no place where intoxicating liquors are sold at wholesale shall be maintained or allowed, nor shall intoxicating liquors be sold at wholesale outside of the business districts as above provided.

Said board shall consider and act upon all applications for license to sell intoxicating liquors, after a report thereon by the chief of police, and the action of said board shall be final and conclusive. In no event, except by the unanimous vote of the excise board, shall any license permitted under this act be granted until a report approving the granting thereof is made to the excise board by the chief of police. In the issuing of licenses for barrooms it shall be the duty of the excise board to adopt such a policy as will reduce the number of barrooms, including those in hotels and clubs, to not exceeding 300 by November 1, 1914. On the granting by said board of a license to sell intoxicating liquors, the assessor shall issue a license to the applicant. Said board shall make such rules and regulations for carrying into effect this act as it may deem requisite and proper. It shall make an annual report to Congress setting forth the number of applications for license, whether favorably or unfavorably acted upon, the number of persons convicted for violation of this statute, and the number and amount of fines collected and uncollected; and it shall have power to issue subpœnas to compel the attendance of witnesses before it, and such subpœnas shall be served by any member of the Metropolitan police force; and said board, or any member of it, shall also have power to administer oaths and affirmations in any manner affected by the operations of this act. Any person having taken such oath or affirmation who shall knowingly give false testimony before said board, or any member thereof, as to a material fact shall be deemed guilty of perjury and, on conviction thereof, shall be subject to the penalty now provided by law for that offense.

SEC. 3. That the said board shall appoint a clerk at a salary of $1,500 per annum and an inspector at a salary of $1,500 per annum. Said inspector shall make inspections as may be required by this act, under the orders of the board, and make full report of such inspections to the board. He shall wear a badge indicating that he is such inspector of the excise board. The board shall keep a full record of all applications for license, of all recommendations for and remonstrances against the granting of licenses, and the actions taken thereon.

SEC. 4. That every person applying for a license to sell intoxicating liquors in said District shall file with the said board a petition for such license, and such petition shall be considered and acted upon by the board in the order in which such petition is filed and numbered. Said petition shall contain—

First. A statement giving the name and residence of the applicant and the time he has resided in the District of Columbia.

Second. A statement describing the particular place for which a license is desired, designating the same by street and number, if practicable, and if not, by such other apt description as will definitely locate it, and how long said applicant has been engaged in business at said place.

Third. The full name and residence of the owner of the premises upon which the business is to be carried on.

Fourth. A statement that the applicant is a citizen of the United States and a bona fide resident of the District of Columbia, and not less than 21 years of age, and whether such applicant has, since March 3, 1893, been adjudged guilty of violating the laws governing the sale of intoxicating liquors or for the prevention of gambling in the District of Columbia.

Fifth. A statement that he intends to, and if licensed will, carry on such business for himself and not as the agent of any other person, company, copartnership, or corporation.

Sixth. A statement that he intends to superintend in person the management of the business for which he asks a license, and that if licensed he will so superintend the management of the business so licensed.

Said petition must be sworn to by the petitioner before a notary public or other person duly authorized to administer oaths and affirmations. If any false material statement is made in any part of said petition, the petitioner making said affidavit shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and on conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalty now provided by law for that offense; and in case a license has been issued to said petitioner the same shall be immediately revoked by said board. Notice of the filing of said petition shall be given by the applicant in such manner as may be prescribed by general rules and regulations adopted by the excise board; and if protests against the granting of such license are filed no final action shall be taken by the excise board until the protestants shall have had an opportunity to be heard, under rules and regulations prescribed by said board.

SEC. 5. That the licenses authorized and provided for by this act shall be of two classes, wholesale liquor licenses and barroom licenses. The fee for a wholesale liquor license until November 1, 1914, shall be $500 per annum, and for a barroom license $1,000 per annum until November 1, 1914; and thereafter the fee for a wholesale liquor license shall be $800, and the fee for a barroom license shall be $1,500 per annum. Every applicant for a liquor license shall deposit the amount of the license fee with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia at the time of filing the application with the excise board. If, upon consideration of the application for license by the board as provided for in this act, the board shall decide to grant the license prayed for, it shall notify the assessor, and the applicant shall thereupon receive his license; and only on the granting by said board of a license to any applicant to sell intoxicating liquor shall the assessor issue a license to such applicant. A barroom license shall be required for every hotel, tavern, barroom, club, or other place in which intoxicating liquors are sold or dispensed at retail. A wholesale liquor license shall authorize the licensee to sell intoxicating liquors in sealed packages only and in quantities not less than 1 quart, and not to be drunk on the premises where sold; and no wholesale license shall be granted until it is satisfactorily shown that the place where it is intended to carry on such business is properly arranged for selling such liquors as merchandise. Every place where intoxicating liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises or in quantities less than 1 quart, whether drunk on the premises or not, shall be regarded as a barroom; and the possession of intoxicating liquors, with the means and appliances for carrying on the business of dispensing the same to be drunk where sold, shall be prima facie evidence of a barroom within the meaning of this act, and the license therefor shall be known as a barroom license. All makers, brewers, and distillers of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, and all agents of makers, brewers, and distillers established outside of the District of Columbia and selling their product in said District, shall be required to take out the wholesale license provided for in this act: Provided, That when such business is carried on at more than one place a license shall be required for each place. Before the excise board may grant a license to a club it must be satisfactorily shown that such club is duly incorporated; that its membership is bona fide, all being on an equal status, with equal privileges and responsibilities; that its purposes are legitimate; and that the sale of liquor intended is no more than an incident, and is not a prime source of revenue. A license to a club shall be issued in the name of its president, and in case of violation of the provisions of this act in such club, he and the secretary, the treasurer, and the manager of the club shall be proceeded against collectively or severally in their individual capacities and, if convicted, be subject to the penalties prescribed in section 14 of this act, and the license of said club shall be immediately revoked by the excise board.

SEC. 6. That under the license issued in accordance with this act no intoxicating liquors shall be sold, given away, or in any way disposed of to any minor, intoxicated person, or to any person who is in the habit of becoming intoxicated, if such last-named person's wife, daughter, mother, father, or guardian shall, in writing, request that the licensee shall not sell or furnish intoxicating liquors to such person, and ignorance of the age of any such minor shall not be a defense to any action instituted under this section; and no licensee under this act shall sell, give away, or dispense any intoxicating liquors to any person between the hours of 11 o'clock in the evening and 8 o'clock in the morning, nor on Sundays, or legal holidays, and Inauguration Day, and between said hours, and on Sundays, legal holidays, and Inauguration Day every barroom and other place where intoxicating liquors are sold shall be kept closed; that no minor under the age of 18 years shall be allowed to enter or be permitted to remain in any place where intoxicating liquors are sold, other than a hotel or club; that the interior of every barroom shall at all times be exposed to full view from the street, without obstruction by screens, blinds, curtains, stained glass, bottles, boxes, signs, or other material, except in the case of clubs licensed under this act and hotels having only an interior barroom, which shall be exposed to full view from the corridors or passageways leading to the entrance or entrances to such barroom.

SEC. 7. That every wife, daughter, mother, father, or guardian, having made the request mentioned in the preceding section, who shall be injured in person or property or means of support by any intoxicated person concerning whom such request has been made or in consequence of the intoxication of any such person, shall have a right of action for all damages actually sustained, in his or her own name, against any person, individual, or corporation who shall, after such request has been made, by selling, bartering, giving away, or otherwise furnishing intoxicating liquors contrary to such request, have caused the intoxication of such person. On the trial of any such suit proof that the defendant or defendants sold, bartered, gave away, or furnished such liquors to such intoxicated person on the day or about the time (and prior thereto) of such injury shall be prima facie evidence that the liquor so sold, bartered, given away, or otherwise furnished caused such intoxication. In any action by a married woman or other person legally entitled to recover damages for loss of support caused by such intoxication it shall only be necessary to prove that the defendant or defendants, after the making of such request, has or have given, bartered, sold, or otherwise furnished intoxicating liquor of any kind to such person during the period when such cause of action shall have accrued.

SEC. 8. That any minor, for the purpose of evading the provisions of section 7 of this act, who falsely represents his age shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined for each offense not more than $50, and in default in the payment of such fine shall be imprisoned in the reformatory or workhouse of said District not exceeding 30 days.

SEC. 9. That no license under this act shall be issued for a longer period than one year, and the year shall begin on the first day of November and end on the last day of October following; and no license shall be transferred by the licensee to any other person or to any other place, except with the written consent of the excise board upon a regular application therefor in writing and after notice and hearing as in this act provided upon an original application for a license; and the fee to be paid by the party applying for such transfer shall be $2, which shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District before such transfer is made: Provided, That the excise board shall not allow the transfer of the license of any person against whom there are pending in the courts or before the excise board charges of keeping a disorderly house or violating the excise laws or the laws against gambling in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 10. That every person receiving a license to sell liquor under this act shall frame the same under glass and place it in a conspicuous place in his place of business, so that anyone entering such place may easily read such license.

SEC. 11. That all applicants for license and persons holding licenses under this act shall allow any member of the excise board or the duly authorized inspector of the excise board full opportunity and every facility to examine, at any time during business hours, the premises where intoxicating liquor is manufactured, sold, or for which a license is asked or has been granted; and the same opportunity and facility shall be afforded, by the licensee or some person acting in his stead, any member of the Metropolitan police force, who has reasonable belief that the law is being violated, to enter and examine at all times such licensed places, and no person or persons shall obstruct, hinder, or in any manner molest such inspector or officer, provided such inspector or officer exhibits a badge showing he is such inspector or officer.

SEC 12. That regularly licensed druggists or pharmacists shall not be required to obtain license under the provisions of this act, but they shall not sell intoxicating liquors, nor compound, nor mix any composition thereof, nor sell any malt extract, or other proprietary medicines containing more than 2 per cent of alcohol, except such compounds, compositions, malt extracts, or proprietary medicines be so medicated as to be medicinal preparations or compounds unfit for use as beverages, except upon a written and bona fide prescription of a duly licensed and regularly practicing physician in the District of Columbia, whose name shall be signed thereto. Such prescription shall contain a statement that the disease of the patient required such a prescription, shall be numbered in the order of receiving, and shall be canceled by writing on it the word "canceled" and the date on which it was presented and filled, and kept on file in consecutive order, subject to public inspection at all times during business hours. No such prescription shall be filled more than once. Every druggist or pharmacist selling intoxicating liquors as herein provided shall keep a book provided for the purpose, and shall enter therein at the time of every sale a true record of the date of the sale, the name of the purchaser, who shall sign his name in said book as a part of the entry, his residence (giving the street and house number, if there be such), the kind and quantity and price of such liquor, the purpose for which it was sold, and the name of the physician giving the prescription therefor. Such book shall be open to public inspection during business hours, and shall be in form substantially as follows:

Date.	Name of purchaser.	Residence.	Kind and quantity.	Purpose of use.	Price.	Name of physician.	Signature of purchaser.

Said book shall be produced before the excise board or the courts when required: Provided, That pure grain alcohol may be sold without a physician's prescription for mechanical, medicinal, and scientific purposes by registered druggists or pharmacists, who shall keep a book for the purpose of registering such sales in a similar manner or form as required for the sale of intoxicating liquors as provided in this section: Provided further, That any person who shall make any false statement as to the purpose or use of alcohol purchased under the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined for each offense not more than $50, and in default of the payment of such fine shall be imprisoned in the workhouse of said District not exceeding 30 days.

Any druggist or pharmacist who shall sell or dispense any intoxicating liquors, except in such manner as provided in this section, or who shall fail or refuse to keep the record herein required, or who shall refill any prescription, or who shall violate any other provisions of this section, shall be guilty of illegal selling, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in section 13 of this act. Upon a second conviction for said offense, in addition to the penalties prescribed in said section 13, it shall be a part of the judgment of conviction that the license of such druggist or pharmacist to practice pharmacy shall be revoked, and the court before which such person is tried and convicted shall cause a certified copy of such judgment of conviction to be certified to the board having authority to issue licenses to practice pharmacy in the District of Columbia.

Any physician who shall prescribe any intoxicating liquor except for treatment of disease which, after his own personal diagnosis, he shall deem to require such treatment, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $200, and in default of payment of said fine shall be imprisoned in the District Jail or workhouse for not less than 30 nor more than 90 days, and upon a second conviction for said offense, in addition to the penalty above provided, it shall be a part of the judgment of conviction that the license of such physician to practice medicine be revoked, and the court before which such physician is tried and convicted shall cause a certified copy of such judgment of conviction to be certified to the board having authority to issue licenses to practice medicine in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 13. That any person, company, copartnership, corporation, club, or association manufacturing, selling, offering for sale, keeping for sale, trafficking in, bartering, exchanging for goods, or otherwise furnishing any intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, without first having obtained a license as herein provided, or shall manufacture, sell, offer for sale, keep for sale, traffic in, barter, exchange for goods, give away, or otherwise furnish, solicit, or receive orders for intoxicating liquors in any part, section, or district of the District of Columbia wherein the same is prohibited by law, upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $250 nor more than $800, and in default in the payment of such fine be imprisoned in the District Jail or workhouse for not less than two months nor more than six months; and upon every subsequent conviction for such offense shall, in addition to the penalty named, to wit, a fine of not less than $250 nor more than $800, be imprisoned in the workhouse of the District of Columbia not less than three months nor more than one year.

SEC. 14. That any person, company, copartnership, corporation, or club having obtained a license under this act, who shall violate any of its provisions shall, upon conviction of such violation, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, and the excise board may, in its discretion, revoke the license; and upon a second conviction of such violation such licensee shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $500, and in addition to such fine the excise board shall immediately revoke the license. That upon the conviction of any licensee of keeping a disorderly or disreputable place, it shall be the duty of the excise board to immediately revoke the license of such convicted licensee, and after such revocation no license shall again be granted to him for said place or elsewhere, nor shall a license be granted to anyone else for said place for a period of three years from the date of said revocation of license.

SEC. 15. That no licensee under this act shall employ or permit to be employed any female, or allow any female or any minor or any person convicted of crime, to sell, give, furnish, or distribute any intoxicating liquors, or any admixture thereof, to any person or persons, nor permit the playing of pool or billiards, or any other games whatever, in the room where such liquors are sold or drunk, or in any adjoining or intercommunicating room; nor shall he, except in the case of hotels and clubs, permit the playing of music or theatricals of any kind, or provide other amusements in his place of business or in connection therewith. Nor shall any barroom licensee establish more than one bar under his license, and the sale or dispensing of liquors, except in case of hotels and clubs, shall be confined to the room in which said bar is located; nor provide or permit to be used more than one entrance to said barroom from the street, which entrance shall be the one mentioned in his application for license, unless the excise board shall especially permit an extra entrance. Nor shall any licensee sell, give, furnish, or distribute any intoxicating liquors to be carried away in buckets, pitchers, or other vessels, except sealed bottles or in original packages; nor shall any barroom licensee sell, give, furnish, or distribute any intoxicating liquors to any female, nor permit any female to enter or remain in his barroom: Provided, That bona fide guests of hotels and clubs having a license to sell intoxicating liquors may be served with liquors at meals in such hotels and clubs during the time liquor may be sold.

SEC. 16. That all applicants who have had a license during the preceding year who so desire shall apply for a renewal of such license on or before the 1st day of September of each license year: Provided, That in the event of the death of a person having a license under this act during a license year there shall be refunded to the personal representative of the deceased such amount of the license fee in proportion to the unexpired part of the license year: Provided further, That the minimum portion of said license fee to be retained for any portion of the license year, irrespective of its proportion to the entire year, shall be $200 in the case of barroom licenses and $100 in the case of wholesale licenses.

SEC. 18. That any person assisting in or aiding and abetting the violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $100 or be imprisoned in the District jail or workhouse for not more than three months for each and every offense: Provided, That no witness shall be excused from testifying in any case brought under this act on the ground that his answers may tend to incriminate him in connection with any violation of this act, and such witness so testifying shall not thereafter be prosecuted for violation of any provision of this act concerning which such witnesses may have testified.

SEC. 19. That prosecutions for violations of the provisions of this act shall be on information filed in the police court by the attorney of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants duly authorized to act for him, and said attorney or his assistants shall file such information upon the presentation to him or his assistants of sworn information that the law has been violated; and such attorney and his assistants shall have power to administer oaths to such informant or informants, and such others as present themselves, and anyone making a false oath to any material fact shall be deemed guilty of perjury and subject to the same penalties as now provided by law for such offense.

SEC. 20. That if one or more persons who are competent witnesses shall charge on oath or affirmation before the attorney of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants duly authorized to act for him, representing that any person, company, copartnership, association, club, or corporation has or have violated or is violating the provisions of this act, by manufacturing, selling, offering for sale, keeping for sale, trafficking in, bartering, exchanging for goods, giving away, or otherwise furnishing intoxicating liquor without license, or in a prohibited district or section, and shall request said attorney or any of his assistants duly authorized to act for him, to issue a warrant, said attorney or any of his assistants shall issue such warrant, in which warrant the room, house, building, or other place in which the violation is alleged to have occurred or is occurring shall be specifically described, and said warrant shall be placed in the hands of the captain or acting captain of the police precinct in which the room, house, building, or other place above referred to is located, commanding him at once to thoroughly search said described room, house, building, or other place and the appurtenances thereof, and if any such shall be found, to take into his possession and safely keep, to be produced as evidence when required, all intoxicating liquors (if the same shall be found in quantities and in condition to suggest that it is kept for sale), and all the means of dispensing same, also all the paraphernalia or part of the paraphernalia of a barroom or other intoxicating-liquor establishment, and any United States internal-revenue tax receipt or certificate for the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor effective for the period of time covering the alleged offense, and forthwith report all the facts to the attorney of the District of Columbia, and such intoxicating liquor or the means for dispensing same, or the paraphernalia of a barroom or other intoxicating-liquor establishment, or any United States internal-revenue tax receipt or certificate for the sale of intoxicating liquor effective as aforesaid, shall be prima facie evidence of the violation of the provisions of section one of this act as charged or presented. If the accused shall be found guilty, the intoxicating liquor so seized shall, after the trial and time for writ of error, if no writ of error is taken, be destroyed by the police department; if the accused be found not guilty, the whole shall be held as his, its, or their property, or the property of the real owner.

SEC. 21. That it shall not be necessary in order to convict any person, company, association, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, of manufacturing or selling intoxicating liquors without license, or in any section of the District of Columbia where the manufacture and sale is prohibited, to prove the actual sale, delivery of, or payment for any intoxicating liquors, but the evidence of having or keeping them in hand and offering to sell or barter, exchanging for goods or merchandise, shall be sufficient to convict; nor shall it be necessary in a warrant or in information to specify the particular kind of liquor manufactured, sold, offered for sale, kept for sale, trafficked in, bartered or exchanged for goods or merchandise, or mentioned in orders solicited or taken for the purchase of intoxicating liquor, but it shall be sufficient to allege in the warrant or information that the accused manufactured, sold, offered for sale, kept for sale, trafficked in, bartered or exchanged for goods or merchandise, solicited for or received orders for intoxicating liquors, or kept it deposited to sell or barter.

SEC. 22. That every person who shall, within the District of Columbia, directly or indirectly keep or maintain, by himself or by associating or combining with others, or who shall in any manner aid, abet, or assist in keeping or maintaining any clubroom or other place in which any intoxicating liquors, the sale of which without a license is prohibited by this act, is received or kept for the purpose of use, sale, barter, giving away, or otherwise furnishing, or for distribution or division among the members of any club or association by any means whatever, without first having a license so to do, or in sections of the District wherein the sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited, and every person who shall use, sell, barter, give away, or otherwise furnish, distribute, or divide any such liquors so received or kept shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to the penalties prescribed in section 13 of this act.

SEC. 23. That any person who shall, in the District of Columbia, in any street or alley, in any public place, or in or upon any street car, or in or upon any other vehicle commonly used for the transportation of passengers, or in or about any depot, platform, or waiting station, drink any intoxicating liquor of any kind, or if any person shall be drunk or intoxicated in any street, alley, or public or private road or in any passenger coach, street car, or any public place or building, or at any public gathering, or if any person shall be drunk or intoxicated and shall disturb the peace of any person, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100, or by imprisonment for not less than 5 days nor more than 30 days in the workhouse or jail of the District of Columbia, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 24. That it shall be unlawful for any licensee under the provisions of this act to furnish or offer to furnish any free food or other gift of any kind or description to those buying or to prospective buyers of any of the liuqors which said licensee offers or keeps for sale; and anyone violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $50, and, upon a second conviction for this offense, in addition to the foregoing penalty, the excise board shall forfeit the license held by such person.

SEC. 25. That the issuance of an internal-revenue special tax receipt or certificate by the United States to any person as a wholesale or retail dealer in distilled liquors or in malt liquors at any place within the District of Columbia shall be prima facie evidence of the sale of intoxicating liquors by such person at such place, or at any other place of business of such person in the District where such special tax receipt is posted and at the time charged in any prosecution under this act, but such time must be within the life of such receipt or certificate.

SEC. 26. That in the interpretation of this act words of singular number shall be deemed to include their plurals, and words of masculine gender shall be deemed to include the feminine, as the case may be.

The words "give away," where they occur in this act, shall not apply to the giving away of intoxicating liquors to bona fide guests by any person in his hotel or private dwelling.

SEC. 27. That this act shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage, and shall be in lieu of and as a substitute for all existing laws and regulations in the District of Columbia in relation to the sale of intoxicating liquors in said District, except such laws as prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in certain defined sections or parts of the District and laws of Congress pertaining to persons, premises, and territory over which the Federal Government exercises jurisdiction; and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act, except such prohibitive laws above referred to, be, and they are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I move to strike out all that portion of the committee amendment beginning on page 3, line 19, to and including line 5, on page 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out, from line 19, on page 3, to the end of line 5, on page 4, as follows:

No saloon, barroom, or other place where intoxicating liquor is sold at retail shall be licensed, allowed, or maintained within 300 feet of any alleyway occupied for residences or of places commonly called slums.

No saloon, barroom, or other place wherein intoxicating liquor is sold at retail or wholesale, other than hotels and clubs, shall be licensed, allowed, or maintained within 600 feet of any public schoolhouse, private school, college, or university, or within 500 feet of any place of religious worship, measured between the nearest entrances to each by the shortest course of travel between such places of business and public schoolhouse, private school, college, or university, or place of religious worship.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say, Mr. President, with the permission of the Senate, that I feel this is too drastic a proposition. I believe it is practically a prohibiton effort. I am opposed to prohibition. I do not believe it is a success anywhere, nor do I believe it can be maintained here. And I say that the particular portion of the bill beginning in line 19, the clause which provides that no saloon shall be "allowed or maintained within 300 feet of any alleyway occupied for residences or of places commonly called slums" is too drastic. Who would be the judge of what might be called "slums"? The provision would practically shut out the opportunity for a licensed place in this city. Further than that, the other portion of the provision which I have moved to strike out I believe is sheerly and utterly in the interest of prohibition.

I believe that the city of Washington, D. C., as I have seen it, is a well-governed and well-ordered city. I have seen no conditions on the streets or highways calling for so drastic a measure as this. I believe it interferes with vested interests and rights and that it is to the detriment and against the general welfare of this community. I urge my amendment and ask for a vote thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to say that that part of the substitute which it is now moved to strike out is considered as one of the most important parts, if not the most important part, of the measure. In the first place, with reference to the provision in regard to alleyways and places commonly called slums, they seem to be well defined in the city of Washington, and I have no doubt that the excise board will be able to determine just exactly what is meant by this provision.

The testimony taken by the subcommittee with reference to this particular provision shows a condition of things that the committee really considered almost intolerable. It seems that many of the alleyways are inhabited by persons who are, of course, in very poor circumstances. They are huddled together in a manner that ought not to be tolerated in the Capital of the United States. To take advantage of the condition of things, it seems that saloons are located in a great many cases at the entrance of alleyways. The committee is very strongly in favor of this provision of the bill, believing that it will, to a certain extent at any rate, relieve the situation.

The importance of the provision with reference to schoolhouses, I think, can be shown very vividly to the Senate by simply reading a statement made by Mr. Fishback before the subcommittee. It discloses a condition of affairs that I did not think possible in the Capital of the country, and it was almost unbelievable to me until I made personal investigation and found that the statements made by Mr. Fishback were absolutely correct in every particular. I shall read from his testimony as it appears in the report:

I wish to speak now of the Central High School situation. On the block on Seventh Street between O and P Streets there are three school buildings. The Henry School, which is located on the P Street side of the block, was built about 1878 or 1879, I should say, or maybe 1880. The Central High School was completed in 1883, and about the year 1890 the northwest wing of that school was built, and a few years later the Polk School was also erected on what was the high-school yard. It was a very deplorable thing that the ground was taken. It was sadly needed for the school playground, and it was done merely for the purpose of saving the money which would have been required to purchase a site.

I want to call attention now, however, to the mile limit of the Soldiers' Home. The act of February 28, 1891, prohibited thereafter the sale of liquor within 1 mile of the Soldiers' Home. It is all indicated on this map here [indicating]. I recall in my boyhood the deplorable conditions which existed north of R Street out what is now called Georgia Avenue, but what was then Seventh Street Road, on account of the liquor that was sold there. Any of us who are at all familiar with the conditions in northwest Washington know absolutely that the conditions in that section now are infinitely better. No one would attempt to deny that statement.

The mile limit of the Soldiers' Home reaches just to the northeast corner of the McKinley Manual Training School, and as soon as you leave the mile limit the saloons are very numerous. Immediately opposite the south end of the McKinley Manual Training School is one wholesale liquor establishment.

Senator WORKS. What street is that on?

Mr. FISHBACK. That is on Seventh Street, just as near the mile limit as it can be. In the next block, between Q and P Streets, are six saloons—five proprietors, I may say, but one of them conducts a two-store establishment, one a wholesale establishment, and the other a bar-room, but to all intents and purposes six saloons.

In the next block the Central High School and the Polk and Henry Schools have the ground on the east side of Seventh Street. On the west side of Seventh Street is the market, which occupies almost half of the block, so there is very little space there for any business. Just around the corner, however, from Seventh and O Streets are two saloons on O Street. In the block between N and O Streets, on Seventh Street, in the block south of the Central High School, are six saloons. In the next block south, between N and M Streets, are eight saloons. In the next block, between L and M Streets, there are five saloons, and in the block between K and L Streets there are four saloons. So that the students of the Central High School who go down Seventh Street, as many of them do, to their homes, and as many more must do to patronize the Public Library, as it is the direct route from the high school to the Public Library, are obliged to pass 23 saloons in four blocks on that direct route. I say it is a shame and disgrace to this Nation that such a thing should exist.

One thing more I will say——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I find no fault with the provision that saloons shall not be located within 150 feet of each other. That would correct the evil about which the Senator is now reading, as stated by Mr. Fishback, but I do insist that the matter he has read has no reference to the amendment to strike out which I have proposed. I am quite willing to agree to the proposition that saloons should be at least 150 feet or 200 feet apart.

Mr. JONES. I submit to the Senator that the law as it is now provides that no saloon shall be within 400 feet of a schoolhouse. We have increased the distance only 200 feet. Now the Senator would strike that out entirely. The Senator would allow a saloon to be placed next door to a schoolhouse. I can hardly think that the Senator intends——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not make that point; but these men have rights, and whether desirable or otherwise, their business is legal. I am not asking that you place a saloon adjoining a church or a schoolhouse, but my point is that many of the men who are in this business have invested their money and are established in a location, and if a church or a school locates next to them I insist that the provision is drastic and unfair.

Mr. JONES. But the effect of the Senator's motion is just what I have said. Then, furthermore, while the committee desired to recognize the rights of these people just as much as possible, it did feel that the rights of the public and the rights of the school children and others should be considered above the right that anyone may have to locate a saloon there. They have no vested right in that location.

The committee was satisfied that there is no provision in the bill that is more urgently needed than this. It was urged that the distance should be made 1,000 feet and 750 feet; it was urged very strenuously that it should be made 750 feet; but the committee did not feel justified in going quite that far. However, we did feel that, in view of the conditions disclosed at the hearings before the subcommittee, there could be no reasonable complaint if the distance was made 600 feet instead of 400 feet, as it now is.

I do hope that these provisions of the bill will not be eliminated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WORKS. On page 4, line 12, after the word "liquors," I move to insert the words "otherwise than in sealed packages, and not to be drunk on the premises."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. On page 4, line 9, after the words "District of Columbia," I move to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words:

Nor shall any license be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors within 150 feet of the railroad and terminal station building at the corner of M and Thirty-sixth Streets NW.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Foster	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Gallinger	Myers	Smoot
Brandegee	Gardner	Newlands	Stephenson
Bristow	Gore	Nixon	Sutherland
Catron	Guggenheim	Overman	Thornton
Chamberlain	Heyburn	Page	Tillman
Chilton	Hitchcock	Paynter	Townsend
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Pomerene	Watson
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Reed	Wetmore
Cullom	Lippitt	Richardson	Williams
Cummins	Lodge	Shively	Works
Curtis	McCumber	Simmons
Fall	McLean	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent on business of the Senate. I should like to have this announcement stand for all votes taken to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was wondering as I listened to the reading of this bill how a measure providing that a child run over by a vehicle should be punished or held liable rather than the person who was driving or who owned the vehicle would be received in this body. If you will adopt the sensible method in regard to the regulation of the use of intoxicating drinks you can accomplish everything and more than is proposed by this measure. You are proposing to issue a license to the wrong person.

I would favor, as I have frequently had occasion to state, legislation that would require every person who desired to use intoxicating liquors to take out a license, and that it be recorded, and that you could go to the public office any time and find out whether a man had had the bravery to let the public know that he chooses to drink liquor. A lot of irresponsible bartenders are held up in the country as the source of this evil. Put the responsibility where it belongs, upon the men who desire to be recognized as drinkers, where their wives and the other members of their families enumerated in this bill can go and see whether or not the husband is an avowed drinking man. Make them brave enough to do it, and you will have accomplished all that needs to be done. There is nothing impracticable about it at all. Make it a crime for the bartender or the person selling the liquor to sell it to any person except upon the miserable production of the license. It would break up treating. Each man would have to pay his own license and buy on the credit of his license.

Legislation that would break up treating would do more to reform the community or the individual along these lines than anything else. Men go into drinking just because they meet and have not anything else on hand; and they get off the street and stand up against the railing of a bar, each treating the other, until courtesy is exhausted, and oftentimes the pocketbook. Now, you are fostering that. You are going to foster drinking in high places and make it difficult and odious for any except those who frequent clubs and expensive hotels to drink.

You will eliminate from the laboring class of the people three-fourths of the number who drink to-day if you will require them to take out a license, some of them because they will not spend the money for a license and others because it would make it available to every other person in the community to know who took out the license. I wonder how many Senators here would go on record in the public records, to stand forever, as a person who needed a drink so bad as to go and take out a license to get it.

I would not make the license high. A dollar will accomplish the purpose and do more for the cause of moderation and temperance than all these drastic measures.

The provisions of this bill would create a large number of criminals within the next 12 months within this town who never expected to be classed as criminals. Legislation will not cure all evils. I would be neither inconvenienced nor offended if there was no liquor manufactured or sold or used. I speak impartially. I am not a temperance man nor a prohibitionist. Prohibition has been used as a political club to its discredit. Prohibition parties have been organized and hired out to politicians (and I use the term now in the invidious sense) in order to handle the balance of power in precincts and counties and even States. Prohibition tickets have defeated the best interests of the country a hundred times where they have accomplished any good whatever. They have produced hypocrites, insincerity among men, one man undertaking to be the censor and the governor of another man's morals, in violation of every principle that should govern in a people such as ours.

Make times good and men busy, and they will not do much drinking. The statistics of the United States show a vast increase in the consumption of liquors during hard times. Take the statistics in the yearbook issued only a few weeks ago and examine this question. When men are unable to find employment and get credit at the grocery store they can generally get it at the bar, and some men can perhaps forget their troubles and the hard times surrounding them. But make it so that men are busy, so that a man goes with a bright face and a buoyant step every morning to his steady occupation, looking forward not to stopping at the bar room to drown his sorrows on the way home, but looking forward to the time in the evening when he shall go home to his family with some money in his pocket or with money earned, and you will see the solution of this question.

But I go back to that which I firmly believe in. Make the drinker pay his license and make it a felony to sell him a drink or give it to him or hand it to him, except that he purchases it on his own license and not on that of another.

Now, if you are going to strike at this evil take time enough to do it right. This bill provides for a cheap court, three men at $2,400 a year, to sit here as the arbiters of the fate of the people in dealing with their own thirst.

Of course, there should be no saloons near the churches or the schools. If you are going to resort to this legislation the provisions are generally wise. There should be no recognition of—I was going to say "swamp lands"; I have forgotten the term. It is where fashionable people are supposed to go to get a glimpse of the unfashionable world under the pretense that they are doing some good or going to do it.

Mr. President, I only rose to call a halt, if I could, upon this folly. You are recognizing evil by legislating for its existence. If it is so evil, legislate it out of existence. If it has some merit, then deal with it as you deal with other affairs touching the morals of men.

A man has a right to drink intoxicating liquors under the law. He has that right and he has had it since the foundation of the Government. If that right is to be classed with crime, then he should never have been invested with that right. If that right is permissible under the moral code, then he should not be interfered with in the exercise of that right, but should be dealt with for an abuse of such exercise.

"Slums" is the word I was trying to think of—slums, bad lands, and all that. You are going to provide that no saloons shall be within a certain distance of that class of habitation. They will simply move into some other neighborhood. Take the city of Washington and make it impossible, or next to impossible, for those who desire to use intoxicating liquors within the city, and they will build up around the District of Columbia what we see about the forts and military posts on the frontier, where they have a rim around for the dives, where men can walk up to the line and stand on the reservation and reach their hand over to the bar that is off the reservation and get their drink, and they can lean their heads over the line of the reservation and drink it without violating the law until it passes the line in their throat where the boundary line strikes. I have seen all these subterfuges. I have seen them try to deal with them.

There was a time when the canteen existed at military posts, and it was a well-organized, orderly manner of recognizing the fact that all persons are not angels. But a lot of enthusiasts got to work on it, and they got bodies oftentimes resembling this; they stood them up and said, "We are going to make you either be a coward and run away or we are going to make you support this measure, whether you think it is right or wrong." I have seen halls emptied, and I will not say what I have seen here in regard to the matter. I think that when a question of this kind is to be discussed the Senate should first call for a quorum, call for the attendance of Members, and then lock the doors. That is the way we should legislate on this kind of a question. They would not have an opportunity to sit around the rim of the Senate Chamber so that they could slip in and out here. I would make us stay here and vote.

I am not to be understood as speaking in favor of reckless living or against the proper control of such matters as the consumption of liquor. I am not speaking against legislation or conditions controlling these things. They are under the control of the law now in the District of Columbia. If that control is not sufficient to secure and guarantee order and good citizenship, let us first inquire as to the character and capacity of the officers in whose hands the execution of the law rests. It may be the evil is there. It may be that we could cure it by a change of officers.

You are going to select a lot of cheap men under the provisions of this bill—three $2,400 men—and you are going to place this great moral question in their hands and give them powers that you can not give them under the Constitution of the United States. You are going to give them legislative, executive, and judicial power, vested in this body of three men. That is what you are proposing to do. I shall not be surprised if, so far as the consideration of this measure in this body goes, you would do it. Whether all men will agree with you or not I do not know.

I do not propose to go on record here as joining in the hue and cry directed against this business. We license men to commit a crime if you proceed along the lines proposed. You license them to sell that which you are legislating against to the limit of making it contraband. Now, let us be brave enough for awhile to face this question. Let us talk about it and we will know more about what men think about it. We can tell better if we talk about it what they think about it than we can by their votes sometimes. I would not cast any aspersion upon sincerity of act or thought by any Member of this body, but once in a while, in order to know whether our own hair is on straight, we have to look in a looking-glass; we can not tell in any other way. Let us look in the looking-glass and see whether or not we are doing or proposing to do the part of conservative, capable statesmen intrusted with a duty; and then let us vote our convictions.

Now, I principally wanted to express that which I reiterate. My purpose in arising was not to go through this bill. It contains many provisions subject to criticism that would put them out of the bill if considered. But I want to propose here, and I want to propose throughout the whole United States, that the responsibility for drunkenness be put where it belongs, on the drinker, and not on some bartender who perhaps would not like to face some very respectable gentlemen if they wanted a drink and he refused to give it to them. Bartenders as a rule do not drink at all. I expect it is safe to say that in the United States to-day 90 per cent of the bartenders do not drink any kind of intoxicating liquor. I may have that percentage too large, but it is very large. The proprietors or the owners of the saloons are generally the brewers or the distillers. The man who takes out the license is ordinarily a stool pigeon who is going to appear to run the saloon. He will be a well-behaved citizen. Perhaps the management of the distillery or of the brewery will consist of well-behaved men who sit in national conventions or conventions of less note. The man who misbehaves in the barroom is the drunkard. Nine times out of ten men who do not drink do not go there. So they can not be charged with it. The proprietors can not be charged with it. The owners of the buildings, perhaps, in many cases do not even know that their building is being used for such a purpose.

You are trying to prevent the evil of disorders that arise out of the barroom. It either walks out in the individual or is carried out in the bottle or a bucket. Now, let us strike at those people and make them behave themselves. Remember we are not dealing with an enemy; we are dealing with our own members of the community. It would seem from some of the suggestions contained in this bill that Congress was sitting here to deal with an enemy of the country and with a person who had no rights. No men are drunk all the time. I will undertake to say that a census will show that there are more sober fools than drunken fools in the United States. There are more men incapable of managing their own affairs or the affairs of others who do not drink at all than there are among those who drink. I have just been doing some thinking about it. I would not vote for a man because he either did or did not drink liquor. I want some other investigation or basis upon which to support him. I want to know whether he is honest and capable to perform the duties to which he is selected, and I will base my judgment upon that.

All temperance men are not lacking in competency or manly qualities any more than are all drinking men. The average will run about the same. Point out a candidate and say, "There is a man who never took a drink in his life," and he plumes himself upon it, as though it were something that would settle all questions in regard to his capacity and fitness. When you come to find out, by talking to him, he has not sense enough to get across the street. [Laughter.] You say of another man, "Here is a man, a candidate for office, he drinks sometimes." The question is, Does he drink more than he should drink, or does he drink at the wrong time? If he does not, and is a competent man, yes, I will support him, and I will support him against a sober fool any time. [Laughter.]

I merely wanted to give out these few words in regard to this question in order that we might not be carried off our feet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for a division.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 27, noes 1.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, for the purpose of avoiding the point of order which I should otherwise make upon that being less than a quorum vote, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not hear the announcement of the result of the vote on the liquor bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. A parliamentary inquiry. While I do not oppose the result, is such a thing known to parliamentary law as a "vote by sound"?

Mr. BACON. Of course. It is done all the time. Nine-tenths of all bills are passed in that way.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was, rather, asking about the law.

Mr. BACON. About what?

Mr. HEYBURN. Whether there was such a thing known.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Kansas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I announced on the last yea-and-nay vote that I was paired with that Senator. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has not voted. I have been informed, however, by the Senator from South Carolina that if he were present he would vote "nay," so I will allow my vote to stand.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 26, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, for the dignity of life, the possibilities which Thou hast placed within the reach of man. "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands; Thou hast put all things under his feet." Help us to appreciate the dignity and the trust Thou hast reposed in us by developing day by day every faculty of the mind and every power of the soul, until we shall have reached that perfection illustrated in the life and character of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, the country has been edified and electrified lately by revelations as to what has occurred at Washington in certain departments with reference to inquiries into various trusts and combinations. This is news to the country. It has no novelty for gentlemen who have been for some time investigating the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation.

I wish to incorporate in the RECORD a few excerpts from the minutes of the United States Steel Corporation showing what was going on at the other end of the line. For instance, when resolutions were first introduced several years ago directing the Commissioner of Corporations to look into the affairs of the Harvester Trust and of the Steel Trust, the Bureau of Corporations immediately consulted the United States Steel Corporation itself with reference to these proceedings, assuring this concern that the bureau would not "run amuck," although it might be necessary to make some inquiries about the conduct of its business.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state the documents he wants to incorporate into the RECORD?

Mr. STANLEY. I wish to incorporate a few remarks containing excerpts from the minutes of the Carnegie Co. and the executive committee of the United States Steel Corporation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD certain excerpts from the minutes of the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. MANN. How long are they?

Mr. STANLEY. There are only two or three pages of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes to explain these excerpts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STANLEY. For instance, Mr. Speaker, way back in 1906 Members of the House and Senators were filing resolutions asking the Commissioner of Corporations to investigate this concern.

Judge Gary, in a statement to H. H. Rogers, J. D. Rockefeller, jr., George W. Perkins, and others, said:

> At the last session of Congress a resolution was passed by both Houses asking the commissioner to investigate the United States Steel Corporation. The commissioner did not pay any attention to that resolution, but soon after Congress adjourned he appeared at this office and stated that he believed that it was his duty to know the general purposes in detail of our business, about our corporation, its capital stock, its liabilities, its assets, the amount of its business, the costs of production, and its methods generally. After considering the question very carefully our finance committee seemed to think it was good policy, and perhaps advisable, to aid the commissioner in making his investigation; and the investigation has been going on more or less since that time. As stated, however, by the deputy commissioner, we decided to furnish the information that was requested at our own expense and by our own labor. The questions which have been asked are very numerous, very searching, and very comprehensive, and we have undertaken to answer those questions in detail. They involve a great deal of labor on the part of our officials, and of the subsidiary companies particularly—so much so that with respect to many subjects the representatives of the department have said that they would not have the time to go over it if we went further in detail or covered a longer period.
> I am making this explanation because you are interested in it and because you may be more or less disturbed without reason. The finance committee has been in close touch with the matter all the time. We have been in frequent and almost constant communication with Commissioner Garfield, and more or less with the President himself, concerning these matters.

I shall incorporate a statement from the minutes in which the commissioner of sales, the man who represented the corporation in pooling its agreements, who then could have been imprisoned if the law had been enforced, said that they were not concerned about the investigation of the United States Steel Corporation so long as it was not conducted by Democrats. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. Can the gentleman give the House any information why it is that the resolution introduced in the House last summer to investigate the Harvester Trust has not yet been reported?

Mr. STANLEY. I will say to the gentleman that in 1906 the Department of Justice sent Mr. Burdette D. Townsend, employing him to make an investigation into the affairs of the Harvester Trust. Senator KENYON, of the committee investigating the United States Steel Corporation, said that this investigation was most thorough. That report was filed in the Department of Justice, stating that the Harvester Trust was a combination in restraint of trade; that the Morgan interests controlled it; that they had received seven or eight million dollars for forming it; that they were selling harvesters abroad cheaper than they were at home; that they had a secret and illegal agreement with the United States Steel Corporation by which the corporation furnished them steel at $3 a ton less than others; that it was destroying the agricultural interests of the country, both in excessive charge to the farmers and to the smaller industries that were making wagons and other things of that kind over the country which were being throttled by the combination between the Steel Corporation and the Harvester Trust.

The minutes of the Steel Corporation contain minute accounts in which they more or less jeer at this idea of the agricultural people who were trying to get the Steel Corporation to fight the Harvester Trust.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman does not quite understand my question. There was a resolution introduced into the House by my friend and colleague from Nebraska last summer during the special session asking for an investigation of the Harvester Trust. According to the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky, all these facts were of record. Why is it that that resolution is still in the hands of some committee of this House and not reported?

Mr. STANLEY. A resolution of that kind was considered by the Rules Committee. A gentleman came before the committee of which I am chairman and asked us to investigate it. The Rules Committee were of the opinion that this committee having investigated the Steel Corporation—and I believe they have done it thoroughly and that no man will charge them with having done it with an idea of whitewashing anybody—that this committee would be in a better position when it concluded its investigation to take up the harvester matter, since it is so directly related to it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Kentucky be given five minutes more in which to answer this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STANLEY. More than that, we have been assured by the Department of Justice that this suppressed Townsend report that was in cold storage during most of President Roosevelt's administration is now being thoroughly examined and that the Harvester Trust would be proceeded against immediately if it does not dissolve itself, Mr. Perkins and others having gone before the Department of Justice and offered to dissolve. I understand—and this is mere hearsay with me, though I think I am fairly accurate—that the propositions of dissolution so far made by the Department of Justice have not been accepted by Mr. Perkins and his allies, and that suit will immediately be brought to dissolve the Harvester Trust. If that suit is brought and vigorously prosecuted, it may obviate the necessity of an investigation.

Mr. JACKSON. Is not that just what the gentleman now is seeking to condemn some past administration for—under advice or by consent, on information furnished by Mr. Perkins—waiting until some other department of the Government shall conclude an investigation?

Mr. STANLEY. No. If the Department of Justice says to the Harvester Trust or the Steel Corporation or any other concern, "You have violated the law and we are going to proceed against you," and they come openly into court and say, "Show us wherein we have violated the law, tell us what you want us to do, write your decree, and we will obey it"—if that course is pursued, then there will be no necessity for a congressional investigation.

I have not heard lately of the Commissioner of Corporations writing any "personal" letters advising anybody, confidentially, of how good he thought the Morgan interests were or how nice and innocent he thought the Harvester Trust was.

Mr. JACKSON. If the gentleman would be entirely frank about it, he would also say that he has not heard of anybody else making any secret trip.

Mr. STANLEY. That practice was discontinued with the last Congress, I hope. I do not know of any late "confidential" communications.

Mr. JACKSON. And, judging from the actions of this House, adopted by the Democratic side, it has not gone out, because I have seen here week after week, month after month, the general counsel of the Harvester Co. waiting around this House to see what would be the outcome of the resolution which has been introduced here to investigate the Harvester Trust. As yet the gentleman's committee has the resolution in its bowels.

Mr. STANLEY. The head of the Harvester Trust appeared before a committee formed by a Democratic House, and he came within an ace of going to jail.

Mr. JACKSON. But he did not go, did he?

Mr. STANLEY. No; he, I regret to say, is still at large. I will say this: That the conduct of a Democratic House in the investigation, both in its treatment of the Harvester Trust and its investigation of the Steel Corporation, has been such that no man who knows the facts can condemn it. More than that, it was due to a Democratic House, it was due to a Democratic committee, that these secret collusions between the Bureau of Commerce and Labor, the executive department, and the Harvester Trust were brought to light; and had it not been for a Democratic House, had it not been for a Democratic committee, this comprehensive report of Mr. Burdette T. Townsend, an able lawyer, coldly and deliberately made, with the exactness and detail of an indictment, showing the sins of the Harvester Trust, would never have come to light. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This collusion between the Chief Executive, the Bureau of Corporations, and the "Morgan interests" is ancient history to the committee investigating the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation. On page 4078 of Mr. MacRae's report is an extract from the minutes of the Carnegie Co. which shows the perfect unconcern with which the Steel Corporation regarded all investigations by the Government so long as they were not conducted by "Democrats." Mr. H. P. Bope, first vice president and general manager of sales for the Carnegie Co., on June 11, 1906, delivered himself as follows:

A number of other very important matters came up during the week, which developed later, so there does not seem to be a great deal of lack of confidence in the future among the buyers. They seem to feel that things will come out all right in the end, and with the adjournment of Congress I believe business will go right along. These investigations have naturally caused a little doubt in the minds of men as to just what is going to happen. We are going into a new era, and, like every case of that sort where men can not see what is ahead of them, they hesitate a little. The same conditions prevailed six or seven years ago when the large combinations of capital began to be formed, which marked a new era in the industrial world. These things were a benefit at the time, and are a benefit to-day, yet on account of the abuses which some of them have undoubtedly been guilty of we will have to figure that there will have to be some sort of control or regulations, and we will have to take it and make the best of it, and I do not know but what it will be better to have these things done by Republicans than by Democrats. A great many people fear this agitation may cause the election of a Democratic Congress this fall, and I believe legislation of this kind would have a worse effect upon business if enacted by a Democratic than by a Republican Congress. I wanted to mention these things because they are actually occurring and are having some effect upon commercial conditions.

W. C. Temple, the commissioner who had charge of the secret contracts which the makers afterwards attempted to destroy, says of this same H. P. Bope, in response to the question:

Q. Who represented the Carnegie Co.?—A. Sometimes Mr. Schwab before the Steel Corporation was formed; after the formation of the Steel Corporation usually Mr. H. P. Bope, their general sales manager.

In 1906 these pooling agreements were in full force and effect, and had the law been then enforced Mr. Bope would probably have found considerable difficulty with the criminal provisions of the Sherman law. He had good reasons to hope that his activities would not be investigated by Democrats.

The letter of Herbert Knox Smith intended to come "only under your (Roosevelt's) personal observation" contained no warning of the unwisdom of "throwing away now the great influence of the so-called Morgan interests." The Steel Corporation had been assured, long prior to this time, that the administration—to use Mr. Smith's words—regarded "the Sherman law, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, as an economic absurdity."

The corporation knew that, as Mr. Smith says, the President had long since learned to distinguish between good and bad trusts, and that to be good it was only necessary to "try to be good and try to keep solid with the administration" and that the bad trusts were those whom Mr. Smith calls "the other people who had not followed such a policy."

The committee investigating the Steel Corporation have known for many months that the Steel Corporation understood that an investigation of its intimate ally—the Harvester Co.—would necessitate an exposure of their methods, and that if the President wished to protect the Steel Corporation he must necessarily keep his hands off of the Harvester Trust, or, as Mr. Smith says in his letter to the President, "the far-reaching Morgan interests," including the United States Steel Corporation, had adopted a similar policy. The Steel Corporation knew long before Mr. Smith wrote to the President with what freezing horror he contemplated the enforcement of the law as interpreted by that "utterer of economic absurdities"—the Supreme Court of the United States—and not by that wiser and more advanced and progressive tribunal, the commissioner himself, the President, and last, but not least, Mr. George W. Perkins.

The Supreme Court—

Mr. Smith admonishes the President—

applies to a combination in restraint of trade whether that restraint be reasonable or unreasonable regardless of the nature or the effects thereof. Should the Sherman law be practically possible, it would not only put out of existence every freight traffic association in the country and produce absolute chaos in railroad affairs, but would be as destructive against substantially every company holding a majority of the stock of any corporation engaged in interstate commerce, such as the United States Steel Corporation.

The Steel Corporation treated this proposed investigation of the Harvester Trust as if it were an investigation of their own affairs and reposed in absolute confidence that Mr. Perkins and other friends at court would protect their interests, although they admitted that they were dangerously near the line between "propriety and impropriety." This letter of Mr. Smith was written September 21, 1907.

The minutes of the finance committee of the United States Steel Corporation contain a communication from Judge Gary made more than a year prior to this time. This statement was made to Henry C. Frick, H. H. Rogers, Morrison, George W. Perkins, Converse, Galey, Corey, Baker, Nathaniel Thayer, Griscom, and John D. Rockefeller, jr., and is as follows:

You also perhaps saw a statement in the newspapers this morning that the Government was making investigations of the United States Steel Corporation and that Mr. Smith, one of the deputies in the commissioner's department, had testified before the committee to that effect. I have no doubt the deputy did make the statements which were published. At the last session of Congress a resolution was passed by both Houses asking the commissioner to investigate the United States Steel Corporation. The commissioner did not pay any attention to that resolution, but soon after Congress adjourned he appeared at this office and stated that he believed it was his duty to know the general purposes in detail of our business, about our corporation, its capital stock, its liabilities, its assets, the amount of its business, the costs of production, and its methods generally. After considering the question very carefully, our finance committee seemed to think it was good policy and, perhaps, advisable to aid the commissioner in making his investigation, and the investigation has been going on more or less since that time. As stated, however, by the deputy commissioner, we decided to furnish the information that was requested at our own expense and by our own labor. The questions which have been asked are very numerous, very searching, and very comprehensive, and we have undertaken to answer these questions in detail. They involve a great deal of labor on the part of our officials, and of the subsidiary companies particularly, so much so that, with respect to many subjects, the representatives of the department have said that they would not have the time to go over it if we went further into detail or covered a longer period.

I am making this explanation because you are interested in it and because you may be more or less disturbed without reason. The finance committee has been in close touch with the matter all the time. We have been in frequent and almost constant communication with Commissioner Garfield, and more or less with the President himself, concerning these matters. Up to date they have made no complaint of us whatever, but we do not know any better than you do what may be the future. We are trying to be frank and accommodating to the department, and we suppose we have an understanding that we will not be unnecessarily injured and that we will not be wrongfully charged without having an opportunity to show the fact. We have seen nothing to show us that we need anticipate any trouble. Quite likely in some respects we may be traveling very near the line between propriety and impropriety.

The report which thoroughly advised the President and the Department of Justice in detail and at length of the violations of law committed by the Harvester Trust was not the report of Mr. Smith, but the report of Burdette D. Townsend, which Attorney General Wickersham admitted before the committee on July 26, 1911, had been filed in the office of the Attorney General four or five years previously.

This report, made by a trusted official of the Department of Justice especially detailed to that particular duty, charged, among other things:

Its (the Harvester Trust's) business has since been increased until to-day it controls about 90 per cent of the total business, and thus a single institution has acquired a substantial monopoly of this branch of commerce. * * *

* * * George W. Perkins conducted the negotiations and devised and executed the plan finally agreed upon. * * *

Discussing its method of organization, Mr. Townsend says:

(5) It was the practicable way in which a trust or combination could be formed. All the features of the transaction are consistent with a purpose to form a monopoly and are not consistent with any other business reason. Everything necessary to form a monopoly was done and nothing more. A monopoly is the only specific result of the transaction. It must have been its purpose. If these parties had intended to form a monopoly, could they have done so more effectively?

* * * * * * *

(6) The price paid J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. indicates the nature of the transaction. Five million dollars is a very high price for the simple service of suggesting to people how they can agree in a legitimate transaction. It is not usual in illegal transactions, such as creating a trust, which can evade the laws. Doubtless if proceedings are instituted against the International Harvester Co. the manner of its defense will demonstrate that the fee was earned.

(7) Another feature is interesting, if not important. The Rockefellers and McCormicks own a majority of the capital stock; Cyrus J. McCormick and George W. Perkins can so terminate the voting trust agreement, whereupon the Rockefeller-McCormick control can be exercised. This is not pure accident. The circumstances of the entire transaction clearly indicate secret negotiations between the McCormicks and J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. prior to the general negotiations. Some one inspired the acquisition of the option of the Milwaukee stock. Added to the McCormick property control of the consolidated company was made easy.

* * * * * * *

That the International Harvester Co. secures rebates from railroad companies, I am assured. And I believe the evidence can be procured to prove it.

* * * * * * *

I was surprised to learn while investigating this subject that the Steel Trust refunds to harvester companies $3 per ton for all steel used in the manufacture of machinery exported, thus giving the same result as if the steel had been imported, the import duty paid, and afterwards refunded under the draw-back law, indicating that steel can be profitably produced in this country and sold at the foreign price. This justifies a small difference between the domestic and foreign prices, but it would amount to only a few cents for each machine and in no way explains the difference indicated above.

* * * * * * *

The International Harvester Co. sells to the foreign trade at a cheaper price than to the domestic trade. It sells machines of all kinds for export, delivered at New York, at the same price for which they are sold to domestic purchasers f. o. b. Chicago. This makes a difference of from $6 to $10 per machine. Domestic and foreign prices to the farmer on 6-foot binders in the United States, $125; Great Britain, $135; France, $173; Germany, $203; Denmark, $167; Sweden, $160; South Russia, $168; North Russia, $180.

* * * * * * *

After all, the most effective weapons employed by the Harvester Trust are of the invisible kind. It is directly allied with that group of Standard Oil financial and commercial aggregations commonly called the Steel Trust, the Coal Trust, the Railroad Trusts, the Banking Trust, etc. The advantages conferred by these subtle influences can hardly be detected; they certainly can not be overcome. Rebates, prices of raw material, the extension or refusal of banking credit, can all be manipulated with a discriminating favor which is murderous to the competitors of the International Harvester Co.

After the committee investigating the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation ascertained that this report, containing the complete conclusive proof of the violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act by the Harvester Co. had been kept in cold storage since 1906, it was no news to them to ascertain at this late date that Roosevelt, Smith, Perkins, and Morgan were all of the opinion that this "Good Trust" which did not rob anybody but the farmers anyway, who had no far-reaching influence, and who did not understand just how to "be good and keep solid with the administration." Why, of course, neither Roosevelt nor Smith were going to uselessly subject this friendly concern to the caprice of that menace to even good trusts, the law of the land, as interpreted by that utterer of "economic absurdities" the Supreme Court of the United States. Especially since we have not yet established the policy of recalling the decisions of that august body who unfortunately seem to be in such bad order just at present with Roosevelt, Smith, Perkins, and many others who have enjoyed the especial favor of "far-reaching financial concerns."

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. This is pension day under the rule.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 23063) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Members will bear in mind when this bill is read in the House that, section by section, it is open to amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I ask a question? Will that be the case with all of these bills?

The SPEAKER. It will be the case with all that are considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But if there are any considered under suspension of the rules——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill S. 5624, an act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of said soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the bill S. 5624, and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 7, line 7, I move to strike out the lines 7 to 10, inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, strike out lines 7, 8, 9, and 10.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Division!

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be reported with the words which are proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment ought to be explained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, strike out, beginning on line 7:

"The name of Henry G. Trimble, late of Company C, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $65 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, this is a Senate bill and it provides for a private pension of $65 a month to the pensioner named. At this time, under general law, the pensioner is drawing $55 a month, and when the bill was up for consideration in the Senate it was there stated upon authority that uniformly the committee having control of these measures in another department of the legislative branch of the Government had limited the pensions as recommended by the committee to $50 per month. Indeed, a gentleman familiar for many years with the conduct of pension legislation in that department of the Government stated that he knew of no case where the committee had recommended more than $50 per month.

It was also stated, however, by another equally distinguished public man that many years ago the present president of the Civil Service Commission was granted a pension of $100 a month on the ground of total physical and mental incapacity, and the same distinguished gentleman stated that the pensioner had been drawing it for many years, and that during all the time had been filling his high public positions, notwithstanding the pension was granted on the ground of mental and physical incapacity.

There are but few exceptions. The other end of the Capitol has stricken out, without exception, in the House bills, every provision that this body has made for an increase over $50 per month at this session of Congress. Not only that, but I believe they have reduced pensions allowed at $36 and $30 a month by this House to as low as $24 a month; and it was only by a vote of 17 to 19 that the present allowance of $65 a month by a special bill was made.

Members of the House will readily see what this means. In fact it was stated at the other end of the Capitol that if this $65 provision was finally enacted into law it would discriminate against thousands of other old soldiers just as deserving, who have been held down for many years to the maximum limit fixed by the committees at $50 a month. As a rational, reasonable, and sane proposition, I submit to the candid judgment of the House that a vote now against striking out this item is a vote by the House—unless it wants to convict itself of indefensible injustice—to change the maximum limit of the House committee and the Senate committee from $50 to $65.

Are you prepared to do it? Is it wise? Is it demanded by the exigencies of the situation in order to do justice to the soldier?

I had not intended to make any remarks on this bill, but, Mr. Speaker, I am sure a sense of right and wisdom will move the House to vote this pension out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard a moment on this amendment.

I will state at the outset that I am going to vote for this amendment, and I want the Members of the House to know why I am going to do so. I supported one like it in the committee, and it is entirely consistent for me to do so now. I want to say that the understanding is to-day with the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House not to place anyone's pension above $50. It has, by a vote of the committee sometimes, been violated, but in every case in which we have made pensions larger—I will not say what the Senate did, to give my friend from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] occasion to object to it—but I will say that in every case where the House has made the sum larger than $50 the beneficiaries were very old, and in one of the cases that I now remember the beneficiary was 111 years of age, and is now and will be helpless until the hour of his death.

These bills have gone to the Senate and have come back and are on the Speaker's desk, or have been referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; every one of them being reduced to $50. Now, here is one sent from the Senate to us, granting $65. The beneficiary in this case is now getting $55. If he were getting less than $50 I would be willing to let it remain at $50, but he is now drawing $55, and has been drawing that for nine years.

I submit, under the rule of our committee and under the rule of this House, although I admit that rule has sometimes been violated, it has never been violated at the other end of the Capitol except in this one instance. I do not believe in making fish of one and fowl of another. I believe they ought to be treated alike. I know of a number of cases that have been before our committee where the pensioners were totally blind, where they were bedridden, where they were entirely poverty stricken, and if anybody should be entitled to more than $50, they would be entitled to it. I am not in favor, in one isolated case, of giving a man who is now getting $55, and has been getting it for nine years, $65 a month when nobody else is able to get it. So that I am going to support this amendment. I will admit that this man is deserving. His case is meritorious. He has lost an arm. But $55 a month is a liberal pension, and for my part I would rather give two pensions of $30 apiece to two old soldiers who are deserving than to give $65 to one soldier who is deserving. I am going to vote for this amendment, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the House should do an injustice merely because some other body may have done an injustice in some cases and may have a general rule which does injustice.

I happen to know personally about this case. This man is one of the most distinguished soldiers in Kentucky. He has lost an arm as a result of a wound received upon the battle field. That arm has been amputated so that it is practically unsocketed at the shoulder joint. As a result of that he is unable to wear an artificial arm, and because of that condition he is now receiving, under the general law, $55 a month.

In addition to this I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that this old man is entirely helpless, as shown by the evidence. His good old wife is also helpless, so that each of them needs an attendant. In addition to that they have no home and no property whatever. They are compelled to live in a boarding house, and out of this $55 a month they pay their board and pay for the best attendance that they are able to employ with the small amount left. This case is a most exceptional one. I concede that there is a general rule limiting pensions to a less rate than is proposed in this bill, but there have been a number of exceptions made, and the mere fact that in some other case they have not increased the rate above $50 is not a valid argument why we should not allow a higher rate in this instance. Two wrongs do not make a right. The answer to such an argument is so self-evident that I am sure I am wasting time to dwell upon it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman is a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, is he not?

Mr. LANGLEY. I am.

Mr. WILLIS. At the beginning of the last session I introduced a bill for the relief of an old soldier living in Bellefontaine, Ohio, who is absolutely helpless, practically dead all except his brain. He requires the constant care of about two people. He is now receiving $50 a month, and I was told by the committee that nothing could be done, because it was an inflexible rule of the committee that no bill would be reported to grant a pension above $50 a month.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not know what member of the committee gave the gentleman that information.

Mr. WILLIS. It was not the gentleman from Kentucky; but I am trying to find out the policy of the committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Kentucky tries to give accurate information. I know that the committee has in some instances at this session allowed a higher rate than $50 a month. I know that there is no inflexible rule of that kind. The attention of the committee has already been called to the fact that this case was fully considered, and I may add, debated for nearly three hours in another body, passed there, and carefully considered by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions, and favorably reported. I appeal to members of the committee to sustain the Invalid Pensions Committee and give this old man, who at best can only live a few months more, this small increase in his present rate of pension, which will make his few remaining days a little bit more comfortable. I wish I could see as much done for all of the old fellows, and I am ready at any and all times to help do it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, in line with what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] has said, approving the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] to reduce the amount of this pension, and enlarging upon reference of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] to the chairman of the Civil Service Commission, I rise to say that I hold in my hand the record of the chairman of the Civil Service Commission, which I think should be given to the House at this time, for the purpose of showing the iniquity in these enormous pensions that are often granted to the select in this House.

The commissioner was granted an increase of pension, and the report states, "From the year 1874 until this day he has been an invalid." The hearing was during the year 1878.

Now listen, I want you to hear the iniquity in the pension granted this man. Here is what the report says further:

He is now a physical wreck; he is maimed and diseased, incapable of any effort, and much of the time he is confined to his bed.

On this report the committee and this House granted him $100 a month. He was getting at that time $50 a month. From the date he began to draw his pension to this date he has drawn $45,722. This is the pension record I hold in my hand. Now, it is stated in this report that he was incapable of any kind of work. Let me read from a book called Men of America, which I secured from the Library. He was a candidate for Congress in 1876. The report says he was an invalid at that time. Since that time this man has drawn out of the Public Treasury of the United States approximately $110,000 in addition to the pension of $45,000, although he is incapable of any work! The reasonable estimate of his Government salaries and his pensions amount in total to not less than $156,000; this enormous sum he has drawn from the Treasury of the United States. A physical wreck! That was stated by the committee. I read correctly an extract from the language in the report. Now, what has he done since the committee granted him $100 per month? I read from book called "Men of America." In 1885 he was United States Commissioner of Pensions for four years. He served in the Fifty-third Congress. He was United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois from 1895 to 1899. Since 1903 he has been a civil service commissioner. Calculate these salaries and you will see that my estimate of $110,000 in salaries of this invalid who has drawn $45,722 in pensions is a low estimate. Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, will you continue in the face of such facts to give over $50 a month when there are so many needy old soldiers as it is claimed, and as Judge RUSSELL tells you, who, if anybody is helped, ought to be helped instead of men like these?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few remarks upon this matter, although I am not in the habit of detaining the House with many speeches. This is one of the most meritorious cases that I have known in the 18 years that I have served on the Committee on Invalid Pensions in this House. This soldier had quite a long service—I think two years or more—and was then shot out of the service.

Mr. RUSSELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know my friend from New Hampshire is a bona fide friend of the old soldier, and so I do not ask him this question to criticize him or his position. Is it not true that our committee has passed upon a number of other cases at this session of Congress equally as meritorious as this and has not been able to get for any one of them a pension exceeding $50 a month?

Mr. SULLOWAY. My answer to that is, that there was no attempt to get it. We come in here and are asked to concur in the Senate proposition. Why not go to conference with these gentlemen and determine the matter? You have made a complete surrender in all these cases, and that is why the thing is as the gentleman has stated. Here is the process of reasoning: I just saw my distinguished friend from Illinois [Dr. FOSTER]. Although I feel certain that it never happened to him, yet, for illustration, if in his practice he ever by accident administered some medicine that killed one of his patients, then, in order to treat all alike, he ought to kill every one of them that he has had since. [Laughter.] That is the logical argument—that because you have done what you ought not to have done in one case and failed to do what ought to have been done, you are going to punish this old soldier, who has only one arm hanging to him, old and feeble, for the reason that somebody else did not get what they ought to have had. And we ought to have insisted that they have what was due them by reason of their service, wounds, and destitution.

This man when he was shot out of the service with a loss of an arm received only $8 a month, which was the full pension at that time. He struggled along and it was increased to $10, not by special act, then to $15, $20, $24, $36, $40, and $55, and to-day this old man, absolutely helpless, with a wife about the same age—I think, in the neighborhood of 80—helpless, penniless, and the Committee on Pensions in another body reported this bill at $65. The chairman of that committee, if it is proper for me to allude to him, opposed that on the floor of the Senate, and the Senate sustained the committee and gave the old hero $65. That is what we asked for here to-day; and just because somebody else has not had what he ought to have had, this man, limbless on one side, penniless, broken down with age, with an old wife in the same condition, must suffer and can not have what is absolutely due him on the merits of the case. I for one will not be silent, but will break my usual custom of being mum and state the facts to the House. It is marvelous and mysterious that we find here this double-shuffle on this matter. The bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I know of no reason why any man in this House should change his vote on that side and fail to stand with this old veteran who has made such a sacrifice, who lost a limb, and is one of the heroes of the war. God forbid that I should. [Applause.]

I wish to say that there never has been since I have been a Member of this House any fixed iron-clad rule and never should be as to the amount of pension to be allowed in special-acts cases. Each case stands on its merit alone, in no wise connected with any other. They are as varied as the stars are numerous. The weakness of such a contention could never be better evidenced than is being demonstrated here and now by those who are asking to amend the Senate bill by striking out this old soldier's name and depriving him of $10 a month that the Senate after an exhaustive debate voted to give him in addition to what he now receives. No one contends that it is too much. No one claims that with the increase that that amount of pension will care for him as humanity demands he should be cared for. Say nothing of patriotism, but that because, as they say, injustice was done to another this claimant must and shall be unjustly treated by this Congress. For one I am opposed and shall continue to be to any and all such rules and actions.

The soldier should be pensioned at $72 per month. For years Congress has granted pensions at $72 to soldiers in his condition, and no one could merit and deserve more than this applicant.

Senate report recommending the increase to $65 per month:

S. 2595. Henry G. Trimble, sergeant in Company C, Third Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, served from August 7, 1861, to October 13, 1864, when he was discharged on account of wounds received in battle. He was wounded in battle at Dallas, Ga., June 2, 1864, causing amputation of left arm near shoulder joint. He has been pensioned since discharge at the highest rates provided by law for his disability, namely for loss of arm at shoulder so as to prevent use of artificial limb. He was first pensioned under the general law at $8 per month to date from October 13, 1864. This was subsequently raised to $15, $18, $24, $30, $36, $45, and $55, as the various laws for loss of arm were changed. He is now and since March 2, 1903, has been receiving $55 per month, which is the highest rate provided by law for this disability. The bill introduced in his behalf proposes to increase his pension to $75 per month. Evidence filed with your committee is to the effect that the soldier, because of paralysis and other diseases incident to old age which have intervened since the allowance of the $55 rate, has become totally helpless and bedridden, requiring the constant aid and attention of another person. Sworn evidence also shows that he has no one to take care of him except his aged wife, who is also so afflicted with the infirmities of age as to be practically helpless herself; that they have no home, but for a number of years have been compelled to board, and that they have no other source of income whatsoever.

The following letter from the Senator who introduced the bill, and who has personal knowledge of claimant's condition, explains in brief terms the present condition of soldier:

JANUARY 12, 1912.

Hon. P. J. MCCUMBER,
Chairman Committee on Pensions.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have a bill pending for the benefit of Capt. Henry G. Trimble, S. 2595, asking that his allowance be increased to $75. I know this man well, and his case is an unusually deserving one. He lost an arm and is paralyzed, being perfectly helpless.

I hope you will call especial attention to this claim. I understand he is growing feebler each day, and the probabilities are he will live but a short time.

Very truly,

W. O. BRADLEY.

In view of the facts as above stated, a majority of your committee recommend the allowance of an increase of his pension to $65 per month.

The above report, so far as it covers the case of Henry G. Trimble, was made by a majority of the committee present at the last meeting. A minority of the committee, including the chairman, opposed the granting of a pension in this case higher than $50 per month on the grounds that $50 per month is the highest amount granted by the committee in any case, and that granting this claimant $65 per month would be giving him $15 per month more than has been the custom of the committee to give other soldiers of equally good service and of equal physical and financial distress.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether my friend means to insinuate that I have changed my vote.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not at all. The gentleman opposed it in the committee, and, thank God, he was beaten.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, the only reason I was defeated in the committee, if I may state it without objection, was because at that time we thought we could only pass bills under suspension of the rules and no amendment could be offered. Hence the committee determined that rather than to have a filibuster, possibly, upon that bill they would allow it to come in under suspension of the rules and not attempt to amend it; but my understanding is that a large majority of our committee is to-day in favor of this amendment.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about what the gentleman's mental reservations were. I know what happened in the committee, and it is not proper to speak of it.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is not proper to speak of what transpired in the committee room, but the majority of this committee, I undertake to say, are to-day in favor of this amendment, and have always been in favor of it if it was thought practical to get a vote upon it in this House; but if it had come up under suspension of the rules an amendment could not be offered and voted upon.

Again, in answer to the gentleman from New Hampshire, it will not be denied that we have passed in our committee at this session of Congress bills granting larger amounts that have been reduced down to $50 by the Senate—one for an old man 111 years old, who is in bed, and has been for years, and will be there until the moment of his death. Yet that bill is to-day in the House, having come from the other end of the Capitol reduced down to $50. I submit that it will not be fair to make one single exception in this House or in this Congress and pay to this one man $65 when the old blind men, men who are in bed and have been for years, and can not get out of bed, are paid less.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman think that the action of another body in reducing all of the rates passed by the House in excess of $50 was correct or incorrect?

Mr. RUSSELL. If it was the rule of Congress, the House and the Senate, to pay more, then I would be as liberal as the next best friend of the soldier in this House, because that is my lifetime record, before I came to Congress as well as now.

Mr. LANGLEY. I believe that is true of the gentleman's record, and I think the same can be said of mine. But if the rule has been violated in many instances, as the gentleman will concede and as the records show, then it is really not a rule; and does not the gentleman think, if that action was wrong, that this is a good opportunity for the House to show its liberality in these matters and as an object lesson to the other body?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have that shown at the other end of the Capitol before we begin to show it here.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think that liberality ought to begin at home in this instance.

Mr. RUSSELL. The rule of Congress has been adhered to in every other case, allowing no more than $50 to anyone, and I submit we should not, in the face of the recent action of the Senate, make an exception in this particular case, and I for one am not in favor of doing it. I am not going to permit, without my protest, the rule to be violated in one case and submissively adhere to it in all other cases, many of which I believe to be more meritorious than this.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are 13 private pension bills on the calendar to-day, all of them omnibus bills. They are passing through practically by unanimous consent. It has been the custom of both branches of Congress for years to pass practically by unanimous consent private pension bills reported from the Committee on Pensions, because we have understood that those committees had certain rules which they lived up to and that they would treat all cases alike; that personal solicitation of a Member of Congress in behalf of some particular constituent of his would not increase the pension over the amount which would be granted under the rules of the committee. I think it is quite safe to say that if it shall become the practice of the House through personal solicitation in the House, through personal influence with Members of the House, to change these rules so as to grant large pensions to be voted upon the floor of the House over the amount ordinarily allowed, private pension bills will have the same difficulty of passage they had when I first came into the House. At that time there were not a dozen pension bills—not omnibus bills—altogether passed in the course of several years. It had been the practice then, if some Member insisted upon allowing a large pension to some constituent of his, for the House to grant it, if it got a chance to vote at all, and the result was that opposition came so that we did not have a chance to vote. The House was constantly held up for lack of a quorum on the consideration of pension bills.

And it seems to me that in the interest of the old soldiers, many of whom need the increases allowed by these private bills, that it ought to be understood that we do not increase pensions over the amount of $50, the rule which has been followed so long by the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions. There are many cases undoubtedly in the past where a larger sum was allowed and perhaps properly. It may be that there are individual cases now which would appeal to every individual Member of the House, but it is impossible for the House to make fish of one and fowl of another. You must adopt some system and some rule if bills are to receive the favorable consideration of the House, practically by unanimous consent, and for that reason I think the amendment offered ought to be adopted. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Let us have a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM Z. NORMAN.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the foregoing is the last pension bill, and I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 16493) to correct the military record of William Z. Norman, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia offers a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16493) to correct the military record of William Z. Norman.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Z. Norman, enrolled as William Norman, late of Company C, Eleventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge therefrom.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That in the administration of the pension laws of the United States it be taken and held that William Z. Norman (alias William Norman) was enrolled in the service of the United States on the 18th day of January, 1862, at Spencer, Va., to serve three years, and was assigned as a private to Company C, Eleventh Virginia Infantry, which regiment afterwards became the Eleventh West Virginia Infantry, and that he served with said regiment faithfully until September 3, 1862, at which time, while in service and in line of duty, he was captured by the enemy and subsequently paroled; and that while under such parole he was again captured by the enemy and shot and killed, about the — day of December, 1862; and that the record of desertion now appearing against his service in the War Department shall be hereafter treated as vacated and annulled."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] asks unanimous consent to consider the bill which has just been reported in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will state that I do not desire to antagonize the gentleman's bill. On the contrary, I would like to see more of these bills passed, because I have many soldiers in my district who were unjustly charged with desertion. I have had a bill similar to this one—not similar in all its facts, but equally meritorious, I think—pending before this committee for several years. I would like to know from the gentleman—who, I believe, is a member of the committee—whether other bills of like character are going to be reported from that committee? I want one or two of mine reported.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there have been some reported.

Mr. HAY. I can say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] that any bill that presents a good face to the committee will be reported.

Mr. LANGLEY. I hope the gentleman does not infer that I am speaking to criticize the committee. I was endeavoring to call attention to a case I have in mind, that I regard as most exceptional—the case of John F. Rudd. This man served nearly three years and reenlisted as a veteran volunteer, and was prevented from completing his service by——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Have all the pension bills on the calendar been disposed of?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair has been in the chair only a few moments, but in the opinion of the Chair the gentleman's point of order is well taken.

Mr. MANN. I think the pension bills ought to be disposed of first, under the rules.

Mr. LANGLEY. Could this bill not be taken up by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker? I thought the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] was to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I made a parliamentary inquiry. I did not make a point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions yielded to me. He had recognition, and he yielded to me.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I was not in the Chamber when the bill was taken up. I do not know the number of it. Some of these bills, I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], got through the committee without my notice, and they will not pass the House with my consent.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that if the testimony——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if all the pension bills are disposed of I shall not object.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to provoke a long discussion of this bill at this time, and I will therefore withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia withdraws the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws—

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I suppose I am not the only Member of this House who has wondered sometimes what the Committee on Pensions is for. I have wondered sometimes if it subserved any other purpose than to cause the Members of this body a whole lot of useless work. That has been my experience with it. But I find on this Pension Calendar to-day 50 private pension bills, 26 of which are reported by the Committee on Pensions of the House. If that is a fair average of the output of that committee, it may be that my failure to get favorable consideration upon a single bill in that committee during my three years' service in Congress is owing to the fact that I am not sufficiently familiar with the procedure and do not know the ropes well enough to get action on such bills.

I think, however, that I can establish the proposition that my failure is not altogether due to lack of diligence, although it may be somewhat due to lack of merit upon the part of the particular pension claims that have been so unfortunate as to fall into my hands.

Mr. Speaker, during the last Congress I succeeded in getting an amendment upon a pension bill in this House. It was an amendment which granted a pension of $12 a month to the widow of a Spanish-American War soldier who was a public charge at that time and who still is, and whose husband died in the county poorhouse at Colorado Springs, Colo., a widow who by her efforts over the washtub, after the death of her husband, supported her three minor children.

I wanted to say that I worked diligently with the Committee on Pensions during the Sixty-first Congress, not simply to get favorable action on the bill, but to get consideration of it at all, and that I absolutely failed throughout the session of that Congress. My correspondence will show the efforts that I made to get even a hearing on that bill.

Further than that, Mr. Speaker, in order to get the record in the Pension Bureau upon which her claim had been rejected there, so that it could be put into the hands of the examiner of the committee, it was necessary for me to call upon the Pension Bureau myself. Of course, gentlemen will understand what that means to the examiner of the committee. The Members will understand that when the chairman of a subcommittee having charge of pension legislation is not sufficiently interested in a bill to call upon the Pension Bureau for the record in the case, but leaves the author of the bill to get it himself, there is nothing doing. However, I had the record produced and delivered to the subcommitteeman in charge of this bill.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Are you referring to the Invalid Pensions Committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No, sir; I am referring to the Pensions Committee. Upon the failure of the chairman of the subcommittee to take this record and act upon the bill, I went to the committee room myself and made an examination of the record. I want to say, in the first place, Mr. Speaker, that this widow's claim was rejected in the Pension Bureau on the ground that the soldier had incurred the disease of which he died, to wit, tuberculosis, before his entry into the service. In other words, the Pension Bureau said that the record in this case showed that this man had tuberculosis upon his enlistment, and therefore not having incurred the disease in the service and in line of duty, his widow was not entitled to a pension.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Five minutes will not be sufficient. I am going to make a pro forma motion on each of these items until I conclude.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to continue for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, when I succeeded in getting the House during the Sixty-first Congress to override the Committee on Pensions and put my claim on the bill, the House took my unsupported assertion that the record in this case did not show that this soldier had tuberculosis when he enlisted. I want to observe by way of digression, however, that I believe the Pension Bureau and the committees of this House ought to be bound by the conditions found to exist with reference to the health of the soldier upon his enlistment. In other words, when a man voluntarily presents himself before the medical officers of the Government for examination and he is duly examined, pronounced, and declared to be sound, then the Government ought to be forever after precluded from raising that question.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that where the pension law provides that a pension shall be granted only when the disability was contracted in the service, and it is shown conclusively that the disability in a given case was not contracted in the service, but existed before enlistment, that the pension should be granted anyhow? That would be the effect if the doctrine of estoppel were applied.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If it was shown conclusively that the soldier was diseased when he enlisted in the service, that might constitute a proper exception, but the gentleman knows as well as I do that that is not the proposition that I am up against.

I hope to show by the record that it was not only not conclusively shown that he had consumption when he enlisted, but it was not even prima facie shown that he had it at that time. The House took my unsupported assertion in the last Congress and put this item on the bill over the Committee on Pensions. I regret very much to say, Mr. Speaker, that there was some one, whom I do not know, who had a soul so small that he followed this bill over to the Senate—this bill pensioning the widow and three orphans of a Spanish War soldier, a soldier who died in the county poorhouse—and had the item struck out of the Senate bill; and this action was concurred in by the conferees and agreed to by the House without my knowledge.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said that some one followed the bill over to the Senate. I think if the gentleman was familiar with the practice in reference to pension bills he would discover that both committees have certain rules and follow them, and that where an item is inserted contrary to the usual rule, unless the gentleman himself follows the amendment over, it will be stricken out as a matter of course in the other body. Nobody need follow it over to have it stricken out. I have had that experience myself.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I hope, then, Mr. Speaker, that the small soul was over in the other body; he was evidently somewhere. I have not been so infernally mad a half dozen times in my life as I was when I found that that item was stricken out. It was in my mind to inform every Spanish War veteran's camp in the United States of the fate of that amendment, after all the labor that I had had in the matter, even going to the trouble myself of running down witnesses, men who had been officers in this soldier's regiment, for the purpose of getting a statement from them as to the apparent condition of this man when he went into the service, and showing him to be apparently sound at that time.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to ask the House to take my unsupported assertion this time. I am going to offer the same private pension bill as an amendment. I do not know whether it will be adopted or not, but I am going to offer it.

And I do not propose to have the Members present here to-day take my word for the fact that there is no evidence in this record to show that this man had tuberculosis when he entered the service. In this connection I am first going to call attention to a letter that I wrote on January 25 of this year to the Commissioner of Pensions about this case. I appreciate the fact that I am wasting much time of the other Members on this proposition, but I have wasted so much of my own time on it—so fruitlessly, as I shall show—that I am not inclined to feel much compunction about the temporary inconvenience that I may cause other Members.

On January 25 of this year I wrote this letter to the Commissioner of Pensions:

JANUARY 25, 1912.

Hon. J. L. DAVENPORT,
Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I want again at this time to call your attention to claim No. 922372, of Mattie J. Sarver, of Colorado Springs, Colo., as widow of Dr. E. Sarver, late of Company G, Second Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain. I introduced H. R. 25620 in the Sixty-first Congress, granting a pension to Mattie J. Sarver and her minor children. Being unable to get action from the committee, I took it up on the floor of the House and got it included in H. R. 32675, which amendment, however, was stricken out in the Senate. Before offering the item on the floor of the House I examined the evidence on file in the Pension Bureau, which, it is claimed by the bureau, shows the soldier to have been afflicted with disease of the lungs prior to his enlistment. I may have overlooked it, but I did not find any such evidence. The only two witnesses whose evidence I read and noted in my memoranda, who appear to have known Sarver before his enlistment, were Samuel P. Kinder and Laura Kinder. Both of these people testified that when he returned from the service he was suffering from lung trouble, but neither of them said anything about his condition prior to the time of his enlistment. The evidence of other witnesses is to the effect that Sarver had coughs and a cold while in the service, but these witnesses do not claim to have known him at the time of his enlistment, and I did not note anything in their testimony that could be considered as legal proof, or, indeed, any other kind of proof, that Sarver was suffering from tuberculosis or disease of the lungs at the time of his enlistment. Since I have a number of Spanish War claims, it has occurred to me to ask you to reexamine this case; and if upon reexamination you conclude that the evidence shows that Sarver was affected with lung disease or tuberculosis when he enlisted, I will thank you for a specific reference to such evidence.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. MARTIN.

I got this reply:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER,
Washington, January 29, 1912.

Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. MARTIN: In reply to your letter of the 25th instant, received on the 26th, I have the honor to state that the papers in the claim No. 922372 of Mrs. Mattie J. Sarver, of Colorado Springs, Colo., as the widow of Dr. E. Sarver, late of Company G, Second West Virginia Infantry, War with Spain, have not yet been returned from the Committee on Pensions, House of Representatives.

I will hold your letter on my desk a few days, and as soon as the claim reaches the bureau will give you the further information desired.

Yours, very truly,

J. L. DAVENPORT, Commissioner.

Mr. Speaker, that letter was dated January 29, three months ago, and I have not yet received the information called for and promised in that letter.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will.

Mr. LANGLEY. Has the gentleman asked for the information again since that time?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have not.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think the gentleman ought to have done that, because there is a great deal of work in the bureau, and they might overlook one case among the many in which they are asked for a report, under such circumstances.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman that if I had followed the practice of hounding everybody who had anything to do with this mattter any more than I have done, I would have to hire a small boy to carry around the correspondence in the case. And my conscience is perfecly clear on the score of owing the Pension Bureau any more inquiries in this case.

But, Mr. Speaker, my efforts were not confined to the Bureau of Pensions, but were also directed toward the Committee on Pensions. I had in the meantime reintroduced this bill, and on the 5th of October last, 1911, I wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Pensions an extensive letter, going fully into the details of this case, and why I thought it particularly merited favorable consideration and action on the part of his committee. Then, again on March 26 of this year I wrote the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

MARCH 26, 1912.

Hon. WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Chairman Committee on Pensions, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: On October 5, I wrote you in behalf of my H. R. 3730, to grant a pension to Mattie H. Sarver and her three minor children, and have your reply of October 11, 1911, stating that the bill would be given consideration. I wrote you very fully at that time, almost three pages, giving the history of my efforts in behalf of this claim in the Sixty-first Congress. I will only refresh your recollection on two points: First, I got the claim put in the bill on the floor of the House, but it was stricken out in the Senate committee; second, the evidence on file in the Pension Bureau does not show that Sarver had tuberculosis when he enlisted, although this is the ground upon which the claim stands rejected by the Pension Bureau.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. MARTIN.

Mr. Speaker, I received a reply from the chairman of the Committee on Pensions stating that this bill was under consideration by a subcommittee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has again expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude my remarks on pro forma amendments later.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have got a lot of letters from people who were going to consider this bill, or who were going to think about it at some time apparently when they did not have anything else to do, but they have never arrived at that time. I received a letter from the chairman of the committee to the effect that this bill was in the hands of a subcommittee presided over by the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. ANDERSON. So on April 15—that is the 15th day of the present month—I wrote to Mr. ANDERSON a letter, as follows:

APRIL 15, 1912.

Hon. SYDNEY ANDERSON, M. C.,
Committee on Pensions, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: You have in your subcommittee one pension case which I am particularly anxious to have considered and passed upon, and that is H. R. 3730, granting a pension to Mattie J. Sarver and her minor children. I have written Chairman RICHARDSON at great length about this bill, calling his attention to the fact that I put it over on the Pension Committee in the House of Representatives in the last Congress, but the matter was followed up in the Senate and stricken out. This is a very urgent and meritorious case and I believe should be favorably reported at an early day. I will be glad to present it to your subcommittee fully, in case you want that done, at any time you designate. I would like for you to examine my correspondence with Chairman RICHARDSON on this bill.

Very truly, yours, JOHN A. MARTIN.

A part of the reading of these letters, and these are only a few of them, is for the purpose of establishing the good faith and diligence with which I followed this claim and tried to get favorable action upon it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will yield after I read the gentleman's reply. It was after my letter of March 26 to the chairman that I received the gentleman's reply.

Mr LITTLEPAGE. What is the date of the reply?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have misplaced it, but I wrote the chairman of the committee on the 26th of March, and it was subsequent to that time that I was notified where the bill was. I received this reply from the gentleman from Minnesota:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 16, 1912.

Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have yours of the 15th instant referring to the case of Mattie J. Sarver, H. R. 3730.

In reply I beg to say that this case was written up some time ago. I have gone over most of the evidence in connection with it and I am not convinced that it is a proper case for favorable action by the committee. If, however, you desire to be heard on that matter I am willing to go over the claim with you at any time.

Yours, very truly,

SYDNEY ANDERSON.

Mr. Speaker, I will say that I did not desire any hearing under such conditions, and I so informed the gentleman to that effect over the telephone. I said that I did not propose to waste all of my time hounding some committee or subcommittee, dancing attendance around the doors of the other Members of this body to get hearings upon a bill, after all of the efforts that I had been making for the past three years to get a hearing on the bill, and then have it turned down and adversely reported without an opportunity for a hearing, only to be told that I could come around afterwards and have a hearing if I insisted upon it. [Applause.] That struck me as a good deal like the story of the justice of the peace who after hearing the evidence adjourned the case over to the following Wednesday with notice that at that time he would enter up judgment for the plaintiff.

Mr. Speaker, I personally esteem the gentleman from Minnesota and I know that he is a diligent and attentive Member. I do not mean to reflect in the least upon the gentleman personally or upon the gentleman's faithful attention to his duties, but I can not think—and I am going to submit the evidence to you gentlemen now—that the evidence which convinced him that this was not a proper case for favorable action by the committee was the same evidence that I read in the files of the Pension Bureau and to which I shall now proceed to call attention. I want to say that I copied this testimony verbatim prior to my presentation of this bill in the Sixty-first Congress. The first evidence that I shall note was a general affidavit from James I. Pratt. Pratt was first sergeant of Company G, Second West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, of which this man Sarver was a member.

This affidavit was made in December, 1908, and this is the substance and the correct substance of the affidavit. It is almost a verbatim copy of his affidavit as I copied it in my own handwriting. It says he was personally acquainted, that Sarver was sick in quarters as follows—and these dates are important—he was sick in quarters from November 10 to 14, November 28 to December 2, and December 10 to December 23, 1908.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Who testifies to that?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. James I. Pratt, first sergeant of the man's company, testified that this man was sick in quarters three different times in November to December, 1908. Bear in mind this man had enlisted July 1, 4 months and 10 days before his first sickness, and when he enlisted he underwent a physical examination in which he was declared by the Army physician to be sound and fit to enter the service of his country.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the hospital record of the soldier agree with the statement of the sergeant?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have not the hospital record, if you please.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is very essential.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to give expression to this thought: It may sound to some gentlemen like a very hollow sentiment, but I think there is much equity in giving a pension to the widow and children of a poor devil like this man if he went out in the defense of his flag with a gun on his shoulder when he was not well, and I think that he is entitled to more credit than a well man. [Applause.] Back of this, Mr. Speaker, I want to say my heart and feelings respond in the warmest admiration for the men who shouldered guns and went out in defense of the flag in the Spanish-American War, the sound, able-bodied young men who went to sacrifice their lives and health for their country, but I feel even more sentiment for a man who went out in a defense of the flag and the country although he felt in his body the seeds of disease and death. That is the way I feel about this.

Mr. DONOHOE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. DONOHOE. With our present knowledge of tuberculosis, would you think it a criminal matter for any Army surgeon or physician to pass a man who was suffering from the disease?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, I think it would be a very grave error, at least, and I would like to think it is not done; but I can not find from the evidence in this case any indication whatever that the Army surgeon was guilty of neglect or incompetency in making the examination of this man. Now, let us see what this first sergeant of the man's company says. Bear in mind the fact that he enlisted July 1; was not sick in quarters the first time until 4 months and 10 days afterwards, November 10:

All of his sickness occurred in line of duty. He was a good soldier as far as he was physically able after his last sickness, November 28, which seemed to leave him with weak lungs, and the cause, as nearly as I can remember, was doing general duty when it was cold and rainy.

Just think of that. That is the character of evidence upon which this claim was turned down by the Pension Bureau, and this starving widow and children are denied fair treatment by their Government. I have quoted this language verbatim:

Doing guard duty when it was cold and rainy at Greensville, S. C., Camp Wetherel.

I turn to the next page. Now, mind you, this affidavit was not gotten up by some pension attorney trying to get a pension for this man. This affidavit was gotten up by a special examiner sent out by the Pension Bureau to get a statement of this case. I am condemning them upon their own showing of their own case, not upon the showing of the case of the claimant.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the special examiner state or admit in his report that the disease in this case was merely exaggerated, increased by service?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to say to the gentleman I can not find any evidence anywhere outside of the statement of the Pension Bureau that this man had this disease when he enlisted in the service.

Mr. LANGLEY. Did the special examiner report that it existed prior to his enlistment? That is my understanding of the case.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This report is made, and it is based upon the man's condition in the service, not based upon his condition prior to the service.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's argument, but I——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has again expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, if the gentleman will agree to conclude in 10 minutes, that he have that much more time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may have 10 minutes, if he will agree to conclude his remarks in that time.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, as a matter of curiosity on my part, if he intends to offer any motion or whether he just wishes to call this matter to the attention of the House?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I intend to offer this as an amendment, but I would like to have 10 minutes more, and I will conclude in that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Pension Bureau procured an additional statement from Sergt. Pratt—and, by the way, Mr. Speaker, I would not be bound by the report of the special examiner in the face of the evidence. God knows I have seen reports of special examiners down there in the Pension Bureau which I blushed to find there on file.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I agree with the main purpose of his argument, but I served a good many years in that office, and my observation has been that these special examiners are a pretty high class of men, and I think he is mistaken when he says——

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY]?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wish I could.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] declines to yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Now, this man Pratt made to the Government this additional statement:

James I. Pratt, first sergeant, etc., Charles Town, W. Va., January 16, 1909.

Now, that is a very recent affidavit. The first one I read from this man Pratt was dated December 21, 1908; the next was January 10, 1909. This is what Pratt said:

Sarver was sick as follows:
In quarters from November 10 to 14, 1898, inclusive. Cold on lungs contracted while on guard.
Sick in quarters November 28 to December 2, 1898, inclusive. Cold from doing guard duty.
Sick in quarters from December 20 to 23, 1898. Cold from doing guard duty.

That is the report of his immedate superior.

Now, here is the next affidavit, or statement, from the regimental surgeon, Dr. W. T. Henshaw, of Martinsburg, W. Va., dated June 16, 1909, to Hopkins & Co., pension attorneys, Washington, D. C.:

I do not recall D. E. Sarver; therefore I have no recollection of any illness he may have had while in the Volunteer service.

So he could not be turned down on that recommendation. The next affidavit, and the most damaging of all, is from Rev. John W. Johnson. He says:

I knew Sarver. During his time of service he was often ill, had a cough, and was often unable for duty; some time in the fall of 1898 he was sick for quite a length of time. Whether he was in the hospital or not I do not remember, but his coughing is fresh to me to-day, as his tent was next to mine. He was a good soldier and a manly man.

I say that is the most damaging affidavit in the record; but, mind you, that does not go to the proposition that this man had consumption when he enlisted in the service, as I shall point out more specifically in these affidavits.

There was also this statement from Rev. John W. Johnson to the Pension Bureau, dated Charles Town, W. Va., January 22, 1909:

Mr. Sarver was not strong; very susceptible to cold. He had a very bad cough. He coughed a great deal at night. He occupied the tent next to mine. This is all I can tell you about Mr. Sarver.

You understand, without any reiteration, that there is nothing in this affidavit to show that the soldier had consumption when he enlisted in the service. But I pass now to the affidavit of Samuel P. Kinder and Laura Kinder, his wife, dated Boomer, Fayette County, W. Va., January 4, 1909. They said:

Knew Sarver well; ample opportunity to observe condition upon his return from the service. Know he was suffering from lung trouble upon his return from the service, which was in about three weeks from his discharge. That he suffered from lung trouble from that time until the spring of 1904, when he went to Kanawha County, and later his lodge sent him to Colorado on account of lung disease.

These people said they knew him well, and that when he returned he had lung trouble. Now, this man did not return until after the 10th of April, 1899, because the record shows he was not discharged until that date. Why did they not ask these people, who knew him well, what this man's condition was when he entered the service?

I am not disputing the fact that he came back with the disease which resulted in his death, because the evidence shows that some lodge, the Knights of Pythias, or some organization of that kind, in West Virginia, on account of his declining state of health, raised the means by which he and his family were sent to Colorado Springs, where he steadily declined from that disease until, as shown by the death certificate, he died of it in the public poorhouse.

Now, here is another affidavit dated May 21, 1899, by Dr. Paul W. Howe:

Dr. E. Sarver came under my observation soon after his discharge from service. From that time until 1905 or 1906 I attended him from time to time, and my diagnosis of the case was pulmonary tuberculosis.

Then there were physicians' affidavits by Dr. C. A. Ray, of Leewood, W. Va., and Dr. H. L. Richardson, made in 1909, who say they examined Sarver in 1906, and found him to be suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis, and the record shows that he died December 30, 1907.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my position is this: Supposing I am in error about this record; supposing there is an additional record somewhere; supposing there are documents affecting this record which I have not seen, ought they not to be dug up by somebody? In good faith I went through all this record, under the advice and direction of the clerk of the Pensions Committee during the last Congress, and I asked him specifically if this was all the evidence on file in the Pension Bureau tending to show the condition of this man, and he said they sent it up as the file in the case.

In relation to that I have read you my letter to the commissioner, and his reply asking that I be pointed to this evidence, the evidence showing that this man had this disease when he enlisted in the service.

I would not concede for a moment, Mr. Speaker, even if this man had been diseased, as charged, when he enlisted, that under all the circumstances in this case it would not be a worthy claim upon which the great Congress of the American people might exercise its discretion and come to the relief of this widow and these three orphans—a woman whose condition was so desperate that I was requested by her friends, in the event I should fail to get this pension, to keep the news from her, lest she might lay violent hands on herself and her children.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I suppose I have relieved my system in part of the grievance that I have nursed with reference to this particular case [laughter], and that I ought to apologize to the Members of this House. And I will make the concluding statement, Mr. Speaker, that I will not offer this bill as an amendment to-day to the pending bill. I will not ask the Members of this House to override the Pension Committee and put this item upon this bill, as I did two years ago. But I will simply ask that the committee shall dig up the record in this case and produce the evidence that will satisfy my mind—and satisfy the minds of Members of this body—that this woman is not entitled to a pension, and then I shall be heard to complain about the matter no more forever. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. RODDENBERY rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I profoundly sympathize with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN], who seems to have encountered as much difficulty in obtaining favorable consideration of a just pension claim at the hands of the Commissioner of Pensions as I have encountered in obtaining the establishment of rural routes from the Post Office Department.

If my friend would read more carefully the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he would thus be saved from some trouble here. He presents apparently a very meritorious claim. But that is not the sole ground upon which he should demand the allowance of the pension he seeks. If he would resort to the "evening-up" rule he would have better luck.

On April 2 the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] said:

Now, as for this Pension Committee. It is a good committee; it has got some of the finest men in the world on it.

He referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Continuing, Mr. THOMAS said:

As I stated, there is no finer committee in the world. Honest, yes; but they are color blind. That committee has given themselves not less than 20 special pension bills apiece. I have gotten 3, and there were no braver soldiers in the Civil War than from Kentucky under the Stars and Stripes and under the Stars and Bars. Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, that they have not been dividing things up properly and as they should. If they can not be elected from that district without more pensions then they are justly entitled to, they ought to send somebody else here in their places. [Laughter.]

The RECORD shows laughter. Mr. THOMAS then proceeds:

I am in favor of these pensions, and I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, I want more pensions in the next bill than I have got or I am going to know the reason why. [Laughter and applause.] I am going to know the reason why some members of the committee can get over 20 pensions apiece and I can get only 3, when the soldiers of Kentucky fought as bravely as the soldiers from Missouri and Indiana did. Mr. Speaker, I believe in a square deal, and I want to demand a square deal in this matter.

Mr. THOMAS continued:

I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri how it is that this Invalid Pensions Committee have given this House from 20 to 30 special bills for each member of that committee and have given other Members from 3 to 10 bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. There is nobody on this committee who has 30 bills, within my knowledge.

Mr. THOMAS. Has not the gentleman over 20 bills himself?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think I have 20 bills; and I will say this, and I hope the Chair will give me time to say it: The committee of which I am a member have directed the special examiner to prepare bills to even up everybody in this House who has bills prepared and ready for consideration.

And that is where my friend from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] should come in. He seems, however, to have had hard luck with the "examiner."

Mr. RUSSELL, continuing:

I have not asked the examiner to write a single bill for me at this session of Congress. Every bill that I have had passed was written during the extra session of Congress, and I prepared my bills at that time. There are some Members of this House who perhaps have not had over two or three, but it is because they have not prepared their cases and had the examiner write them up and get them ready for insertion in this or other omnibus bills.

But that can not be so said of the gentleman from Colorado. He has had the most ample preparation of any pension case that has been presented to the House of Representatives since I have been a Member, but he says it has been turned down in both quarters.

Mr. RUSSELL, still continuing:

We have directed that everybody be treated fairly, and we are willing at the end of this session that the light may be turned upon our actions to see whether or not we have been fair.

Mr. THOMAS. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that during the extra session I had over 50 bills prepared. They are there now before the examiner, with all the proofs prepared, and I have had three bills reported out.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman should go to the examiner about it. I do not know what bills he has had written up, but I know that is the order of the committee. If the gentleman has his bills ready he will get as many as the other Members of this House.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not got them up to the present time.

Now, that was before the last two bills that we are voting on to-day. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] is now properly taken care of.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What is the matter that is pending before the House at this time?

The SPEAKER. The matter is the bill that was reported by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN], and debate on the paragraph is exhausted under the rule. If any other gentleman speaks on it, he will have to get unanimous consent.

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, asked me a while ago to present these bills to the House, as he was obliged to attend a very important meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I have done so at his request. I make this statement to explain why he is not on the floor at this time. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], the subcommitteeman in charge of the bill of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN], be allowed 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] have 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Pending that request, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to conclude my remarks at this time in two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for two minutes before the gentleman from Minnesota begins. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Continuing, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] said:

I have not got them up to the present time.

Now, I merely wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] to the fact that when he wants to get his pensions considered favorably the proper way for him to proceed is to give notice that if he does not get them this time he will know the reason why next time. Bear in mind that the real, genuine merits of your pension claim will be considered by the committee and, no doubt, adjudged; but also remember that the element of "evening up" Members enters into the equation. To be sure, a soldier here and a widow there and a dependent child here may be left off the pension roll when they ought to go on the pension roll, while the evening-up process is in operation. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], who will now follow me, can fully elucidate this matter and can suggest to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] how he can get a pensioner on the Spanish War pension roll, for, as a member of the Pension Committee, he should be very capable of pointing a way out. I trust he will do so.

Mr. RUSSELL. With the consent of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], I should like to ask for one minute in order to explain something that has been referred to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] asks unanimous consent for one minute before the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] begins. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, what has been read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as having been spoken by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] might be construed as a criticism of myself or of the Invalid Pensions Committee. I want to say——

Mr. RODDENBERY. I did not so intend it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not believe the gentleman did so intend it, but I want to say that in the discussion that took place between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] and myself on the occasion referred to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] was mistaken in the statement that he made. Immediately after he made that statement I went and hunted up the record, and instead of having only three bills passed, as he thought, he had already had five bills passed, and he had had two that had gone to the committee and been turned down because the proof was not sufficient. He also had four others that had been approved and recommended to go into the next omnibus bill, and they have been passed by the House, giving him now nine that have been passed. My friend from Kentucky was simply mistaken in the statement he made at the time. If he was here to-day, he would, I have no doubt, concur in what I have stated.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has been heard at great length in regard to a pension case which he had pending before a subcommittee of the Committee on Pensions, of which I am the subcommitteeman. The remarks of the gentleman remind me somewhat of the way an old Army friend of mine used to paraphrase Shakespeare: "Methinks, Horatio, thou dost protest too much." The gentleman's case must be indeed a bad one if it is necessary to protest before this House as the gentleman from Colorado has done this morning.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado read some correspondence he had with me in reference to this case. I submit that my answer to his inquiry was entirely courteous. I offered to go over with him the evidence in regard to this case. I have read it several times and it does not convince me that the applicant is entitled to a pension.

The gentleman from Colorado called me up over the phone, and after some conversation, in which I said to him I did not think the case was a proper one to be considered by the Pension Committee favorably, he said that he did not intend to bother with any subcommitteeman on that committee. He has very properly carried out that statement in his remarks before this House this morning.

The case has not been rejected by the Pension Committee. Ordinarily I would have asked to have the case laid on the table and it would have been rejected by the committee, but out of consideration for the gentleman from Colorado, recognizing that he had a special interest in it, I kept it on my desk in order that he might present his side of the case, but he has never made even the slightest attempt to do it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wrote the gentleman a letter, but only got the reply that it had been turned down. Does the gentleman undertake to say, after all the correspondence I have read this afternoon, that I have not made an honest and earnest effort to get a hearing on the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. The gentleman, in spite of his protests for his regard for me, has nevertheless attacked my diligence and honesty on this committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to say that I had no intention of doing so; I had not the slightest idea of attacking the gentleman's diligence or his honesty.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this case was called to my attention by the special examiner detailed from the Pension Bureau some time ago. I carefully examined not only his report, but the evidence in the case. I found that in the last Congress the Senate Committee on Pensions upon consideration of it made an adverse report, and stated as follows:

In this case the widow's unfortunate condition is one to excite much sympathy—

In that I fully concur—

but the evidence wholly fails to substantiate the claim that the soldier's death was due to his service or in any way to connect his death with his service. It has been a general rule of your committee to grant pensions to soldiers or widows of soldiers of the Spanish War only in cases where there is strong presumptive proof that death or disability was due to the service.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is not a fact or belief alluded to in the report which the gentleman has just read that he had tuberculosis when he entered the service.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I shall get to the facts if the House will give me as much time as it gave to the gentleman from Colorado. I want to say here that as far as I am concerned I have no pride of opinion in this case. It is altogether possible that the House may think that the facts in this case present a sufficient presumption to entitle the claimant to a pension. It was my intention when I had an opportunity to bring the case before the full committee in order that it might be discussed there and determined, but I do not think that the House ought to pass upon this case without its having been submitted to the full committee. Nor do I think it ought to pass it on the unsupported statement of the gentleman from Colorado, and in saying that I do not in any way reflect upon the integrity of the statements of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that any statement made by a Member of this House to the gentleman's committee with reference to any pension claim or the condition of the claimant would not be regarded and given proper credence?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to say anything of the kind. I say that any statement made by a Member of this House to the committee will be given all of the weight to which it is entitled. What I did say was that I did not think this House ought to set a precedent of passing a claim here without that claim having been considered by a committee of this House.

The facts in the case are these: The report of the physical examination at enlistment shows, in regard to the soldier's previous sickness, typhoid fever and pneumonia. At discharge he claimed no disability and none was shown. It is claimed here that none was shown at the time he enlisted; that the examiner found none. He claimed none when he came out of the service. The examiners at his discharge found none, and I submit that as far as I could find there is not a scintilla of definite evidence that this man had consumption, from which he died, prior to 1905 or 1906. Dr. A. C. Roy examined the soldier in June, 1906, and pronounced his trouble consumption of the lungs. There was some testimony to the effect that he had it previously, but this testimony was extremely unsatisfactory, as the doctor who testified could recollect no dates whatever. The Colorado Springs (Colo.) record of death shows that the cause of death was pulmonary trouble of three years' duration, the physician stating he got no history of the case. The soldier died in 1908. The evidence shows further that while tuberculosis does not seem to have developed until after the man's discharge, he did have a weakness of the lungs and general physical weakness prior to his enlistment. Many of his comrades testified that he should not have been received into the Army.

The soldier lived in Indiana two or three years prior to 1897. One witness there said that he never considered him a robust man, but remembered no complaint of any illness. He knew of no lung trouble or cough at that time. Another soldier said he worked for him from March 18, 1895, to August 1, 1896, and that he was sick during that period a number of times.

The witness said that he had piles very bad; that he had seen his condition and helped him apply the remedy; and also that he had stomach and bowel trouble, but knew of no other complaint until asked directly, and then said that the soldier had colds which generally settled on his breast and made him short of breath; that he did not have much cough, but was hoarse nearly all of the time. The cough was worse from morning to noon; that he was narrow-chested and slim and that his health was poor.

Does that bear out the contention of the gentleman from Colorado that this man was in perfect physical condition when he entered the Army?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LITTLEPAGE). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. KINDRED. Do I understand the gentleman to state that because in some of these cases of pensioners who develop tuberculosis while in the service, and who make that the basis of their claims, that it might not have been perfectly possible and feasible that the same man applying for employment in the United States Army could have been perfectly free from tuberculosis and an efficient man at the time of the application, although he may have had some of the physical characteristics to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I get the gentleman's question.

Mr. KINDRED. I understand that the gentleman has emphasized the fact that some of the enlisted men soon after their enlistment perhaps became inflicted with tuberculosis, and that because of certain physical characteristics which the gentleman has described, namely, hollowchestedness and other characteristics, they were not fit for enlistment.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; I said so.

Mr. KINDRED. Can the gentleman give more than a mere dictum, a mere statement that his contention is correct?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I can give the dictum of the gentleman's own profession, if that is satisfactory to the gentleman. The point in this case is this: In order that this man's claim or this woman's claim be allowed by the Committee on Pensions she must show that the disease from which the soldier died was contracted in the service in line of duty. Now, the evidence in this case shows that the consumption from which he died did not develop until after his service.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But he was turned down at the Pension Bureau because he had it before he enlisted.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I do not care anything about that.

Mr. KINDRED. I do not wish to take up the gentleman's time unnecessarily, I assure him, but my point is that this particular soldier might have developed tuberculosis very quickly after his enlistment, but at the time of his enlistment he may have been perfectly sound and efficient.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. He may have been.

Mr. KINDRED. You must not therefore blame the officers who allowed his enlistment under this implication.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I do not blame them at all. I realize doctors make mistakes sometimes, otherwise the graveyards would not be as full as they are.

Mr. KINDRED. Rarely; but I believe the gentleman belongs to the profession of law, whose mistakes are often hanged.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I do.

Mr. KOPP. I understood the gentleman to say that in order to receive favorable consideration by the committee the claimant would have to show that the disease from which he died was contracted in the service.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. In order for his widow to obtain a pension under existing law and under the rules of the committee, it would be necessary to show that the soldier died of a disease incurred in the service.

Mr. KOPP. If that can be shown, she can get a pension at the Pension Bureau.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. She can.

Mr. KOPP. What is the purpose of the committee?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I did not select the committee, but would say this to the gentleman: That the committee probably does not require as strong proof as is sometimes required in the bureau. If there is reasonable presumptive evidence of the occurrence of the disability in the service from which the soldier died the committee ordinarily passes the case.

Mr. KOPP. That is the point I wished to establish.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. The Pension Bureau requires absolute proof.

Mr. KOPP. That is the reason I called the gentleman's attention to it, for, as I understand, the Pension Committee only requires some degree of proof, a scintilla of evidence, so to speak, while the Pension Bureau requires conclusive evidence.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. James I. Pratt, corporal and sergeant in the soldier's company, testified to his sickness as shown by the muster-out roll, but did not recall nature of sickness. After hearing his affidavit read, he recalled that the soldier coughed a good deal in service. He said:

> He ought never to have been taken into the service; from my observation he appeared to have weakness of lungs from the first. * * * Sarver appeared to have his cough or weakness of lungs aggravated by the service, but, as stated, he appeared to be affected by the trouble to some extent all the time and should not have been enlisted.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I yield, but I would like to get through.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I read into the RECORD from my own handwriting, copied from the affidavit of this man Pratt in the Pension Bureau, and I would like to ask the gentleman where does he get the statement he is reading now?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I am reading from the report of the special examiner of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I read from the report of the testimony of the witnesses.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. John W. Johnson, another comrade, a sergeant, testified that he tented with soldier awhile; that he was sick several times; went home once on sick furlough; do not know what particular sickness he had, but he had a cough and appeared to have a general weakness. He suffered considerably with the cough; was a very frail fellow; I judged from his make-up that he had lung trouble; he had the cough and apparent weakness from the witness's first acquaintance with him in service; at enlistment did not think he should have enlisted. His cough and weakness appeared to be aggravated by the service, but he had not the physique for a soldier.

W. R. Fyfe, comrade, says he tented with soldier; knew him before service; did not remember that he had any sickness before service nor in service; did not remember any cough; had no sickness in service to his knowledge.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If it be conceded that this soldier in question died from consumption, and if there is a sharp difference of opinion as to the fact of consumption in its initial stage when he went into the Army, I would like to ask the gentleman if that is not precisely the sort of case the Committee on Pensions ought to be interested in and give very liberal consideration to from the fact that if a man threatened with consumption is sufficiently patriotic to enlist under those circumstances and expose himself to the rigors of war in defense of his country or in defense of its cause, ought not that to appeal to patriotic consideration in connection with his pension?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. The gentleman suggests facts somewhat broader than the evidence warrants in this case. I do not think he was in the initial stage of consumption when he enlisted.

I think he was a man who was naturally predisposed to consumption. It was possible his Army service aggravated it somewhat. I do not know. It is very evident from the testimony here that he ought never to have been taken in. But his case does not come within the rules of the committee, and it is the duty of the committee to allow those cases which do come within the rules, so that those which do not may not get the preference.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. TAGGART. The man was examined when he went into the Army, was he not?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. He was. He was examined when he came out, and no disability was found in either instance, and he claimed none.

Mr. TAGGART. You will admit that the man who examined him knew more about his consumption than he did himself?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. That does not follow at all.

Mr. TAGGART. That is, he knew more than the doctor?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. That with his previous knowledge of the history of the case the soldier might know more about it.

Mr. TAGGART. Now, do you want to hold his widow responsible for any mistake the examining surgeon made from the time he was accepted into the service?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I am not attempting to hold anybody responsible for anything. I am trying to discuss this case on its merits.

Mr. TAGGART. Do you not think we are wasting more of the time of this House than the pension is worth?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I do think so, absolutely. But that is not my fault, but the fault of the gentleman who brought it up.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that, on reflection, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART], who has just observed that we are wasting more time than that pension is worth, would himself subscribe to the doctrine that the remark suggests.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman from Minnesota subscribed to it, though.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did not hear the speech of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], and I do not know whether he does or not, but if both of them subscribed to it, it would not make it sound doctrine.

Certainly there should be a medical examination for enlistment, and unless it can be overturned by unquestioned proof, unquestioned evidence from persons not interested, the examination on discharge ought to be a protection to the Government and the taxpayers as against efforts to obtain pensions. I know nothing about the merits of the case that my friend from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has. But I do want——

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Just one moment, please. But I do want to say that, in my judgment, after the observation of 15 years of service in this House, his charge of the lack of diligence on the part of the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on Pensions is unfounded.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Not the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The Committee on Pensions, then. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if I were to indict those gentlemen at all, it would be for too much diligence. I believe that more bills go through this House that should not go, many more, than there are deserving bills that fail to go through. But if any man believes that these pension committees are not diligently employed, let him go to the beginning of this Congress, let him throw his eye over the 2, 3, 4, 6, or 10 pages of special pension bills that the RECORD shows were introduced on one day, and he will then have a faint idea of the amount of work lodged on those committees. And the number of them that they turn out show that they have been diligent in the discharge of what some gentlemen conceive to be their duty.

Whether they have been discreet, whether they have properly protected the Treasury, is quite another story. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] makes one suggestion, however, that I do sympathize with a little.

I used to have a friend, an officer in the Army, a man who for four years was a soldier in the Civil War, and a good one, and a most excellent gentleman, wise and philosophical, who advanced a theory that seems to have found some favor in the mind of my friend from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN], who said that if a sick man wanted to enlist his patriotism was of a higher order and the country ought to be more profoundly grateful to him for it. My Army friend had a theory in regard to war, which he looked upon as sinful and unnecessary. He said, "By all means if we were going to have a war we should enlist the sick people and cripples, those who were worthless physically, and send them to the war and let them be sacrificed for the country, and that, as a consequence, in time we would have a race of people of whom we all might be proud." His idea was to keep the strong, healthy men at home and at work and to send the physically weak and undesirable to the sacrifice. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] seems to indorse that doctrine, because he would not put up the barrier of requiring that the enlistment be only that of a sound, physical man.

Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about the merits of the gentleman's case. I am not sure how I shall vote on it if he offers his amendment, but again I protest against the accuracy of his charge that the committees of the House have not been diligent.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, is there some amendment pending before the House?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. There is no amendment pending except a pro forma amendment, and that has been withdrawn.

Mr. KENDALL. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York to ask a question.

Mr. KINDRED. Is it not always strongly presumptive that the medical examination, made as a prerequisite for admission to the Army, is sound, and that is a sufficient proof that the enlisted man is efficient and good for service?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is good presumptive evidence.

Mr. KINDRED. It is very conclusive.

Mr. KENDALL. Regular order!

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if I am in order, I will offer my amendment at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Just as soon as the paragraph has been reached the gentleman can offer his amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Kate C. G. Ewing, widow of Lee M. Ewing, late of Fourth Company, United States Volunteer Signal Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of two minor children of the soldier until they respectively reach the age of 16 years.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, as a new paragraph, after line 6, page 2, the following:

"The name of Mattie J. Sarver, widow of Doctor E. Sarver, late of Company G, Second Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional for her three minor children, Helen M., Emery R., and Glenia N. Sarver."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, just a word. I stated when I had the floor awhile ago that I would probably not offer this amendment at this time. Since then, however, the chairman of the subcommittee has presented to the House a carefully prepared typewritten statement of the facts in this case, as he understands them, so that the House now has all the facts before it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman wants to make that statement. I stated very fairly on the floor of the House that I was reading, in part, from a memorandum prepared by the special examiner detailed to serve the Pensions Committee in this House.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It purported to give the facts, and the House having now before it all the facts submitted by both sides, I submit the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I will withdraw my demand, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota withdraws his demand.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HAY. I understood the gentleman from Minnesota made the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. He did, but he withdrew it before the gentleman rose.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute in which to make an announcement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that this debate and this discussion has extended so long that I fear the committee will bring in a special rule directly cutting off debate and amendments, designed to stop this filibuster, which I regret to see gentlemen obstreperously conducting. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] is recognized.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the conference committee of the House and Senate has had under consideration for nearly a year House joint resolution 39, relating to the popular election of Senators.

We felt that we were strong enough to force the Senate into line, but we found we were unable to do so. The conferees failed to reach an agreement. The matter was reported to the Senate, and that body, by a larger vote than before, voted to insist on the Senate amendment. A message from the Senate announcing that fact is now in the House. I want to give notice that to-morrow, as soon after the convening of the House as I can get recognition, I desire to move to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment and to concur in that amendment. [Applause.]

PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] have five legislative days in which to file views of the minority of the Committee on Insular Affairs on the bill (H. R. 22143) to establish a qualified independent government for the Philippines and to fix the date when such qualified independence shall become absolute and complete, and for other purposes (H. Rept. 606, pt. 2).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] have five legislative days in which to file the views of the minority on House bill 22143. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

PENSIONS.

The House resumed consideration, as in Committee of the Whole, of the bill H. R. 23515.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 23765) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws—

The name of John W. Bolt, late of Company G, Third Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The name of Morton W. Sebring, late of Company E, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

The name of Alfred B. Light, late of Company D, Third Regiment Missouri Mounted Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jane R. Bonnin, widow of George W. Bonnin, late sergeant, Company E, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Jane R. Adams, widow of George William Adams, late captain of Maj. Chevallie's battalion, Texas Cavalry, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Charles J. Cronin, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Jacob M. Ratcliff, late of Company H, First Regiment United States Dragoons, Texas and New Mexico Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The above bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 6817. John W. Bolt.
H. R. 8542. Morton W. Sebring.
H. R. 9804. Alfred B. Light.
H. R. 14349. Jane R. Bonnin.
H. R. 16409. Jane R. Adams.
H. R. 17970. Charles J. Cronin.
H. R. 23477. Jacob M. Ratcliff.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 19721) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM Z. NORMAN.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 16493) to correct the military record of William Z. Norman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Z. Norman, enrolled as William Norman, late of Company C, Eleventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge therefrom.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, is this bill on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Private Calendar. It is to remove a charge of desertion.

Mr. FOSTER. If I may be indulged for just a moment, I understood that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was to go ahead this afternoon after the pension bills were finished. A great many Members have left, under that impression, and I do not believe it is proper that the gentleman should bring up these bills.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. It is on the calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. I realize that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the rule provides that after pension bills are disposed of bills of this kind shall be in order on the second and fourth Fridays of the month.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we will need a quorum here if we insist on bringing up these bills.

The SPEAKER. A quorum will be required if anybody raises the point.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I will have to raise the point if anybody insists on bringing up these bills.

Mr. LANGLEY. They are in order.

Mr. FOSTER. I will let this one go, but I will not let any more go.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. I ask that the substitute be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That in the administration of the pension laws of the United States it be taken and held that William Z. Norman (alias William Norman) was enrolled in the service of the United States on the 18th day of January, 1862, at Spencer, Va., to serve three years, and was assigned as a private to Company C, Eleventh Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, which regiment afterwards became the Eleventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and that he served with said regiment faithfully until September 3, 1862, at which time, while in service and in line of duty, he was captured by the enemy and subsequently paroled, and that while under such parole he was again captured by the enemy and shot and killed about the — day of December, 1862, and that the record of desertion now appearing against his service in the War Department shall be hereafter treated as vacated and annulled.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21279, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HAY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield not exceeding 60 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I hope it will not be necessary for me to use all the time that the gentleman from New Jersey has so generously yielded me for this debate. Under the special rule of the House there has been made in order, as a rider upon this Post Office appropriation bill, a bill which has been pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce providing for the appropriation to the Government and the payment by the Government therefor of all of the property of all of the express companies in the United States—13 in number.

The act does not simply give authority to appropriate; it appropriates all of the property of these companies used in connection with the express business, leaving the only question to be determined the value of the property, to be ascertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission, unless the Postmaster General shall indicate that, in his judgment, some of it may not be necessary.

Coming at this time, in this manner, it is a very extraordinary proposition. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has been giving very diligent attention to this bill. It involves a policy of government almost revolutionary in its character. It proposes to take over not only the small-package express business, but all the express business of the country.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. Is there anything to prevent the express companies starting into business right over again?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Nothing whatever. There is no limitation of 100 pounds or otherwise on the packages the Government is expected to carry when it condemns this property. But the Postmaster General is instructed to proceed to do the express business of the country. The express business of the country under the recognized definitions involves all of the package business carried on passenger trains or upon trains at passenger speed. Very often these packages go up into the hundreds of pounds of weight to the individual package, dependent on the necessity of quick transportation.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at the time this rule was adopted by the House had not taken action on that bill. Rarely, indeed, has any committee of the House proceeded to grapple with a big question with more diligence and earnestness than was that committee proceeding in this case. For practically 10 days preceding the time when the House adopted this rule we had been holding daily sessions on the bill, sometimes afternoon sessions without the permission of the House, as well as forenoon sessions.

After the passage of this rule by a majority—a bare majority—of the committee a favorable report was directed on the bill. I was under the impression until a few moments ago that no report had been made, but I find within a few moments a report was made yesterday.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is this the same bill that was incorporated in the rule?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The same bill. The committee has devoted most of its time in the consideration of the bill to hearing of but one witness and to consultation with but one witness, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS]. We have not had the time or opportunity even to call any member of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon this vital and important question.

I want to say, first, that the testimony and assistance afforded the committee by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] has been very valuable and instructive to us. There is a big field for usefulness in this modern world for the man who knows. I have heard the addresses of the gentleman from Maryland in the House, and have heard practically all that he has said in the committee, and had the benefit of his compilation of facts and deductions which are printed in pamphlet form. It is very evident that the gentleman from Maryland knows much about the transportation question. He has an analytical mind, he has unstinted industry, and he has performed a very great service to the committee and the country, and yet he has by no means exhausted this great question.

Much of the compilation which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] has prepared is based on the work performed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. As you all know, we have by amendment to the interstate commerce law given jurisdiction of express companies to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and with characteristic thoroughness that commission is going to the bottom of the express question.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know whether the Committee on Rules before it reported the rule took any testimony upon which it based its action?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do not know, but I have no intimation or suggestion that it did. I think that it is but fair to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to say that the members of that committee have taken a great interest in this problem. They realize it is one of the most serious problems before the country; they realize that the necessity of giving relief against exorbitant charges for carrying and quickly transporting small packages is a vital question, but I think it is but fair to all to say that the individual membership of that committee has not, with all of its diligence, been able to reach a satisfactory conclusion upon that proposition. We very much need the testimony of members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, particularly the testimony of Judge Lane, who has given much attention to this express proposition.

With the adoption of the rule to bring this great question in here as a rider on an appropriation bill we have had absolutely no opportunity for that testimony. We did call Judge Lane before the committee in connection with the bill that was reported unanimously, known as the Adamson bill, which prescribes zones and limits the maximum charges for the express business within those zones. And if it is advisable at this session of Congress, in a hurried way, to pass any legislation seeking to remedy the evils of the express problem, my recommendation would be that the Adamson bill, which has been reported unanimously and without divergence of judgment by this committee, should be adopted at this session as a substitute for the pendng measure. Or, if we are bound to take over the solution of the entire express problem in the United States as a rider upon a Post Office appropriation bill, my suggestion would be that we follow the logical course and adopt a policy by which we would compel the railroads of the country, which do all of the freight business and all of the passenger business and which operate the very trains that carry the express business, to also perform the express business of the country and at reasonable rates, to be controlled by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will say to the gentleman from South Dakota that there is a bill pending before his committee for exactly that purpose. I introduced the bill two years ago and again at this session, and I propose to address myself to the subject to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman will pardon me for stating that I had not examined the provisions of his bill and was not aware it pointed in that direction. I will say that I have prepared a bill which is pending before the House providing that the railroads of the country shall hereafter perform the entire express business of the country and at reasonable rates, and that they shall be completely under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, both as to rates and the quality of the service.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. FOCHT. It is very evident that the gentleman is much opposed to the proposition for the absorption of the express companies at the expense of the Government. It has been suggested that in order to meet that objection the Government make a monopoly for itself of the transportation of small packages up to 11 pounds and prohibit any carrying company from conveying packages under 11 pounds. Would that meet that situation?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It would not meet the situation in the interests of the people unless the Government should make a better rate than any that is yet proposed in parcel-post bills.

Mr. SULZER. Why would it not? The Government would have a monopoly then.

Mr. FOCHT. Absolutely.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes; and unless it reduced the rates it would exact from the people larger prices than they are paying now.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that very often the easiest way to kill a bill is to load it down with something that is impossible, and we seem to be confronted here with the question of the absorption of these express companies at this enormous cost, which might kill the bill. It has already been charged that the express companies are desirous of having that thing done.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Upon that subject I will say that the express companies were notified to appear at this hearing, and if I am not incorrectly informed two days were designated for them when they should appear and none of them came, and I am not at all surprised that they did not come.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman tell us why the 11-pound-package proposition would not work out satisfactorily?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Under the thorough investigation that the Interstate Commerce Commission is making of this subject, with the facts adduced at the time that Judge Lane was before the committee on the Adamson bill, it is perfectly apparent that before this summer is over, if Congress does not take any action on the matter, some positive steps will be taken by the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel the express companies to very vastly reduce their rates throughout the United States, and to adopt modern methods of accounting in the express business by which they can afford to make very substantial reductions. And I do not wonder that the express companies do not object to the wholesale taking over of the old junk that they have accumulated in 50 years by the Government and getting a good price for it. Neither am I surprised that the railroad companies are not opposing this proposition, as I will endeavor to develop further in the case as I go along and explain why. The testimony of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], the testimony of anyone who has gone to the bottom of this subject, would be that the amount received by the railroad companies from the express companies under these contracts is twice normal or twice what it ought to be. Yet here is a proposition that proposes to affirm these contracts and make the Government paymaster under them which would absolutely prevent any material reduction in rates except such as you can make by economy in the service that the express company is now doing. That I will develop more fully as I proceed.

Now, anticipating there might be a report filed sustaining the majority views or setting forth the majority views, I have already said, and there is no breach of confidence in saying that the views of the majority of the membership of this committee are really not known definitely upon this question. The report was adopted under this stress of circumstances, the House already forcing us to agree upon it or not to agree upon it, and action was taken by a majority of a bare quorum.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I am not in a position to challenge the gentleman's statement about that, but I would like to ask the gentleman how much time has been allotted him——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is the gentleman suggesting that the statement can be challenged?

Mr. LEWIS. Later I will explain. May I ask the gentleman how much time he is allowed.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have been allowed an hour.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to ask, perhaps, during the gentleman's discourse a number of questions, and I do not wish to break up the argument of the gentleman. I would like to know if the gentleman will accept such questions.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. With the utmost courtesy, and the gentleman can exercise his own judgment as to when and how he will ask his questions. I will say this——

Mr. LEWIS. In regard to the vote, for I happened to have been an invited participant with the committee working on this subject——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I practically stated that.

Mr. LEWIS. The vote was 8 to 3, was it not, in reporting this bill?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Now that the gentleman has stated the fact which I did not intend to disclose, I will say he is absolutely correct, but gentlemen of the committee will see that 8 and 3 are 11. The committee has 21 members. The membership present then was 11, which is a bare quorum, or half of a man more, as twice 11 would be 22. As I say there were 11 members of that committee, 8 of whom voted for it, so you have a report here, made, as stated by the gentleman from Maryland, by 8 members of a committee of 21. Those are the facts which the gentleman has forced me to corroborate. So that you have not an affirmative manifestation from any source of acquiescence of the other 13 members of the committee. As I said in the beginning in all frankness, nobody is to be criticized here for voting upon this report. It was an extraordinary proceeding that the House should have decided when this great question was before one of the committees of the House that it should be put as a rider upon an appropriation bill while the committee was in session endeavoring to secure further light upon the subject.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman please inform the House whether or not, generally speaking, the meetings of the committee are attended by all the members, or was that a fair average of the attendance?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The condition of that committee upon this matter as in all others is that it is very faithful to its duty, and they do the best they can to get at the bottom of the facts pertaining to all important questions coming before it.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. But as to the number of the committee who usually attend a meeting?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Well, in this case it was a bare majority. There is always a majority if you are trying to do any business.

There are very grave and serious objections to the Government's condemning and taking over the contracts, agreements, and miscellaneous property of the express companies. It would involve a large expenditure, the extent of which no one can estimate in advance, but probably not less than from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000. The express company statistics for 1909 show the following items:

Real property	$14,932,169
Equipment	7,381,405
Materials and supplies	138,210
Advance payments on contracts	5,836,666
Franchises, good will, etc	10,877,369
Total	39,165,819

The statistics for 1910 show real estate $15,890,048, and equipment $9,830,815, an increase on these two items over the figures for 1909 of $3,407,289. Under the bill as now presented it is not proposed to condemn the franchises. But, on the other hand, it is proposed to condemn the "contracts, agreements, and arrangements" between the express companies and the railroad companies. These contracts extend into the future and are the basis upon which the express companies are making large annual profits, probably not less than 50 per cent on the capital invested.

That word "franchises" was stricken out by the committee, and I am supposing, although it is a mere supposition, that the bill which was finally acted upon by the committee will be substituted or offered to be substituted for the one involved in the rule.

The statement of the gentleman from Maryland was that the profits of the express companies upon the contracts was over 100 per cent. The statement of Judge Lane before the committee on the Adamson bill is to the effect that as to the Great Northern Express Co., it having a very slight holding of property, the profit on the capital invested might be as high as 2,000 per cent.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Much is made in this discussion by those who are in favor of the appropriation of the express companies of the value of these contracts. I wonder how long these contracts run. Can the gentleman give us any information?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Indefinitely, some number of years ahead, some expire and are being renewed, but I am not able to say the average length of time they cover.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right in connection with that?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Has any authority ever been cited by anyone that would allow the appropriation of these contracts to the benefit of the Government?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Authority has been produced before the committee by gentlemen who believe it is good authority. Personally it seems to me to violate the fundamental essence of a contract. A contract is based upon the agreement of minds, and I have suggested, and now suggest, whether there is any such public emergency as to warrant the Government in enforcing a condemnation of contracts between private individuals and corporations and, beyond that, forcing the substitution on behalf of the Government as one party to a contract when the other party has not agreed.

Mr. TOWNER. That is exactly the proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The contracts do not provide for any substitution.

Mr. MADDEN. What do they provide as between the express companies and the railroad companies?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will state that in a word. The contracts, in the main, provide that the total express business over the railroad line or railroad system shall be done by the one express company and that a certain percentage of the gross receipts from the express business shall be given back to the railroad company as its part of the profits of the business, and the average of that percentage is about 47.53 per cent. It ranges from 40 up to 57 and odd per cent. The Pennsylvania contract, I believe, is 55 per cent.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman inform me and the committee whether or not any authority has ever been presented that would go further than condemning a contract—that is, the beneficial effects of a contract? Is there any authority anywhere that will allow the superior government, under the right of eminent domain, to condemn a contract and compel its performance by those against whom the condemnation proceeding is instituted?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I question very much whether there is such lawful authority, and certainly if there is such it should be exercised only in case of rebellion or war or extreme public necessity. My colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], has quite thoroughly examined into the legal phases of that precise question.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will allow, I will state what, it seems to me, the authorities hold. In the case in the Sixth Howard, United States Supreme Court Reports, in the case of the West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, the Supreme Court held that it was not competent for the State of Vermont to condemn the franchise of a company and itself operate the company in the same manner that it was operated before, because it had no right and it was not the function of the State to operate a private concern for the benefit of the public treasury. That would be carrying on a private business with public funds, and property could not be acquired by condemnation in that way.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is an extremely important question and one which I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will do the House the honor and service of discussing before this debate is closed.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. In reference to the question whether a contract can be condemned under the power of eminent domain——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will yield only for a question.

Mr. LEWIS. This is not a question.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Then make just a brief statement. I am admonished that nearly half of my time is gone.

Mr. LEWIS. The point has been distinctly raised and acted upon by the Government in the case of the Panama Railway, where stock of the Panama Railway as a private company was condemned by the Government, and is being to-day utilized by the Government in operating that railway.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like very much to discuss that subject myself, but I have other matters here that I feel I must bring to the attention of the committee.

Mr. BOWMAN. Would not any railway be obliged to give to the individual or the Government, under the law, the same contract which they are now giving to the express companies?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would not make an affirmative answer to that, finally.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if the gentleman from South Dakota will permit, by saying, as to express companies, the Supreme Court has expressly held that railroads could not be compelled to so do.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. My understanding is the same. I do not think there is any authority in the Government to question the right of the railroad companies and express companies to make the sort of contract they have made, unless their terms are such that they interfere with the free and unrestrained commerce between States.

And I may say right there—because it may not occur to me again—that there is another way in which the Interstate Commerce Commission can, and I believe will, give relief in this matter. Really one of the greatest obstacles in getting a proper reduction of express rates now grows out of the fact that 48 per cent of these charges go to the railway company by virtue of these contracts, and you can not make very material reductions in those rates unless you can reduce that 48 per cent. You leave the Interstate Commerce Commission to the performance of its duties, and, in my judgment, it will declare that these contracts are unnecessarily high between the companies—the express companies and the railway companies—and that they operate to interfere or restrict interstate commerce; and the Interstate Commerce Commission should require that they be reduced.

But here is a monstrous proposition, that we, the Government, will ratify and confirm those contracts, take them over, and ourselves agree to pay rates which in themselves make it impossible to make proper reduction of express rates to the public.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the judgment of the gentleman that the Interstate Commerce Commission will compel the railroads to take less than 33⅓ per cent of their gross receipts?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I believe so, because both the railroads and the express companies are common carriers; and they can be made to reduce their rates to a reasonable figure, and they can be made to reduce that part of their expense which goes to the express company, the same as the railroad company can be made to reduce its charges. Here it is proposed to take over these contracts and ratify them and confirm them and become the paymasters ourselves.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. The statistics show that the express companies in 1909 paid the railroads for carrying their packages an average of 7 cents a ton-mile, and the Post Office in 1908 paid the railways 13 cents a ton-mile.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. The question now arises as between a parcel-post scheme and this proposition. Is the gentleman in favor of paying 13 cents a ton-mile under the parcel-post scheme or 7 cents a ton-mile under this proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. No; by no means. And I will show, if I have the time, how inefficient are every one of these parcel-post schemes that have been proposed.

You take the proposition of reducing the cost of the carriage of 11-pound packages by parcel post to 88 cents. The express companies are now carrying their packages of 11 pounds at 50 cents. The average express distance on all packages is 196 miles, and you can send an 11-pound package anywhere in the United States that distance now by express for 50 cents, as shown by the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

There is still another reason why the argument of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS]—that we will get a cheaper service by taking over the functions of the express companies—is at fault. Why, the Post Office is paying twice as much as the express companies pay for the service that the railroad is doing in the carrying of our postal mail—13 cents a ton-mile. Under these contracts, in working them out, the railroads are shown to get from the express companies 7 cents per ton-mile. And yet the gentleman states in his testimony and in his synopsis, and perhaps truly, that what the express company gets is twice too large, which goes to demonstrate that what the Government is now paying is four times what it ought to be for this service.

And yet it is proposed here as a solution for unreasonable express rates that we shall take over the whole function of the express companies and leave it with the Post Office Department, which is now paying four times what the service is worth, according to the figures produced by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the gentleman himself.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him right there——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What is the gentleman's solution of this matter?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Compel the railroads to perform the express service, and at reasonable rates. I will say that I agree very well with much of the data that the gentleman from Maryland has gathered together, but I do not agree with him in the conclusion that he draws from his data. I agree with him absolutely that the parcel-post propositions that are here proposed would not afford adequate relief to the people. The express companies are now doing this business at exorbitant charges, and the 11-pound rate proposed in the parcel-post bills will not afford relief. The gentleman is absolutely right in the contention that we have got to find a solution of the problem of carrying small parcels by express, but when the gentleman suggests the solution, I find it is illogical and impracticable. It is not the right solution.

I will just take one basis of his facts to show how fallacious his argument is. The gentleman cites among important facts the relation between express charges and freight charges per 100 pounds on the business generally.

In foreign countries it is five and a quarter to one, the express charge being on an average five and one-quarter times as much as the railroad charge for freight. In the United States he says, and probably with approximate correctness, although the Interstate Commerce Commission has found it a very difficult matter to reach satisfactory conclusions—the gentleman from Maryland concludes by a system of averages that in this country the express rates, eliminating the question of collecting and delivery, are as 15 to 1, or in round figures three times as high as they are abroad. In all these foreign countries, so far as I am aware, certainly in most of them, where they are doing the service for about one-third as much as it is done here, compared to the freight charge, the railroad companies themselves do the express business.

The gentleman denominates the express company a parasite, simply attached to the railroad company for the purpose of multiplying the profits and giving two people an opportunity to share in the profits of the business. In other words, abroad they do the business for approximately one-third of what is charged for doing it here. Abroad the express business, as well as the other business, is done by the railroad companies. Here it is done by a parasite. The gentleman's solution is to abolish one parasite, the express company, but to take on another parasite, the Government, under identically the same contracts, as a solution of the problem. My solution of the problem is to compel the railroad companies in the United States to do the express business, as in these other countries, where the business is done for one-third of what they are doing it here. Then you will have a logical solution of the problem and dispense with the parasite altogether, instead of having a substitution of parasites.

Mr. LEWIS. Would that method connect the country with the city?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. No; and the method that the gentleman's bill proposes does not connect the country with the city.

Mr. LEWIS. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The bill can be read. I have read it. I have studied it, and there is not a word in it about articulating the rural service or the star-route service with the express service; and the gentleman knows very well, and I know, that the rural service is in no possible shape to take over this business of transporting large express packages. The average weight of an express package in the United States is 32.82 pounds. They go up as high as a ton. A valuable horse may go by express. A ton of any valuable material may be sent by express. Structural iron that must be sent quickly to a bridge to repair the results of a washout is sent by express. Pianos may be sent by express. Is our rural service prepared to handle the express business? The gentleman knows it is not. That part of the business must be worked up gradually. The pending proposition to begin a parcel post along rural routes, if it is broadened enough so as to permit an interchange of parcels between all rural routes centering at a given point, will begin the solution of that part of the business, and that can be articulated with the express service under the charge of a railroad company just as well as with the Post Office Department. But how can it be done? The Interstate Commerce Commission are now working out a stamp system as a substitute for the elaborate accounting system of the express companies and proposes it as a solution of much of the expense of accounting. In other words, all that is needed when you get the express business down to a bare profit-making basis is to have an express stamp, as well as a postage stamp; and if you start a package upon a rural route you can put on it not only the postage stamp that will take it to the railroad station but the express stamp that will take it the rest of the way. In other words, you can articulate a sane and modern express business, controlled absolutely under the Interstate Commerce Commission, just as well with the rural routes as you can if it is all under the post office, and it is much easier and much less expense to the Government to work it through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As the gentleman has stated, there is no certainty that the Government will do the entire express business?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Absolutely none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is there any other country where the Government has the entire express business?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I know of none unless it is in connection with countries where the Government owns the railroads. The usual system abroad is the one which I propose here, to compel the railroads of the country, all common carriers of freight and of passengers, to also carry express and thus eliminate the parasite of the express company.

Mr. FOCHT. We understand that, but will the gentleman tell us how the farmers are going to get their postal packages and dispatch those they wish to send?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think I have already told that. This bill does not propose any relief upon that subject.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman give us his idea?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. My idea about that is that whether the railroad companies are to be the final express transporters or the express companies, there ought to be a system of articulation between the express business and the rural postal business, both in connection with the rural routes and the star routes. There ought to be express stamps. For instance, if the express is 30 cents and I wanted to send an article over a rural route I would put on, say, 25 cents for the rural post express and also my 30 cents express stamp, and it goes to its destination. Something of that sort would have to be done however it is brought about.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. Is it not the gentleman's purpose that where the rural carrier goes into a town he goes to the railway and deposits the package and also gets the package and returns it the same way in using the intermediary?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That can be worked out. I agree with the gentleman from Maryland that the parcel post at a 12 or an 8 cent rate is a mere subterfuge. You can send a package any average distance now by express 33⅓ per cent cheaper than you can at an 8-cent rate of parcel post if it weighs 11 pounds.

If the Government shall condemn and take over these contracts, it is reasonable to expect that very large values will be established, which the United States will have to pay for them.

Furthermore, as I have said, the bill does not provide that the United States shall become the exclusive operator of the express business. There is nothing whatever to prevent the railroad companies and the express companies from entering into new contracts as soon as the present contracts have been condemned and paid for. Such new contracts between themselves might be on more advantageous terms to the express companies than the present terms, with the result that the Government might be powerless to compete with the express companies and its condemned contracts might become absolutely valueless.

Mark that, there is nothing in this bill that proposes to prevent the express companies or the railroads entering into new contracts to do this business.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say that an amendment of that character is proposed to be offered.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will say at this point that this bill before it can pass must be whipped into shape in this House, and ought to be seriously considered and have many amendments proposed which would have been proposed in the committee if the House had been willing to have given the ordinary courteous periods that committees usually have to pass upon great questions.

Again, the proposed measure, in my opinion, fails utterly to strike at the real causes of excessive express rates and to furnish relief therefrom.

It must be manifest to anyone who has studied this problem that no great reduction in express rates can be made until a way is found to materially reduce the amounts paid to the railroad companies for transporting the express parcels. Practically one-half of the total express receipts are paid to the railroads. This is done by virtue of the contracts. Mr. LEWIS, in his study of the question, says that experience "certainly indicates that the railway portion of the present express charge is about twice what it should be." And yet no provision is made for reducing this exorbitant charge, but, on the contrary, it is proposed by this bill to perpetuate these unreasonable rates by appropriating and ratifying the contracts.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman will concede that the bill provides that when the contract terminates from any cause the Interstate Commerce Commission shall determine the rates which the railroads shall pay.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The bill provides that after the contracts are taken over at the end of any given contract the Postmaster General shall indicate what he thinks should be the terms of a new contract, and the railway shall state what they think should be the terms of the new contract, and if they can not agree, then they appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is supposed to determine what shall be the basis of these contracts between the parties, which is a perfect absurdity. The Interstate Commerce Commission has authority to regulate commerce and to demand reasonable rates, so that they shall not be in restraint of trade, but whoever heard of a commission being appointed to assist in the agreement of minds for the perpetuation of an old or the making of a new contract? It is without a parallel in the law.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Assume the Government condemned these contracts and took its position as one of the parties to carry out the contract, could it not cheapen the transportation by eliminating the profit which the express companies now make out of the contracts?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If it could do the business as cheaply as the express companies do and desires no compensation or return upon the many millions of capital invested in the plant, it could eliminate the profits, and if it succeeded in eliminating them all, it would in the year 1909 have eliminated $11,000,000 and odd, or 8 per cent of the total charge, and nothing more.

Mr. STERLING. As I understand the gentleman, he thinks the express company should be eliminated from the whole proposition and the Government deal directly with the railroads.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think that it is not at all certain that the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the aid of the law, will not be able to so reform the business the express companies are doing that they can get a valuable service out of the express companies at a low rate. If that can not be done—and I for one am not at all anxious that further efforts should be made about it—I think the logical solution will be to compel the railroad companies to transport the small packages also.

Mr. STERLING. If the Government should do that, if it should undertake to eliminate the express companies and deal directly with the railroad companies for the purpose of carrying small postal packages, the railroad companies would probably carry them for 48 per cent of what the shipper has to pay now, and that would reduce the expense to the shipper more than one-half.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The exact rates that the Interstate Commerce Commission would compel the railroad companies to do this business for, of course, can not be settled offhand, but they would be reasonable. My bill provides that. My opinion is that if the railroad companies were the common carriers under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with authority to fix the maximum rates and exact a competent service, we would be getting the service at not to exceed half what we are paying for it now, and perhaps even less.

Mr. STERLING. As I understand the gentleman, he has a bill which he has introduced himself. Does that provide for the elimination of the express companies?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It does.

Mr. STERLING. And under the gentleman's bill would the Government have any investment in the matter at all?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. None at all.

I shall ask the indulgence of the committee a little further on this particular proposition.

The only reduction in rates contemplated by the present bill is to be made by eliminating the profits to the express companies and by anticipated savings in operating expenses. The problem may be seen in concrete form by examining the following data furnished to the committee by Mr. Lewis, and based upon the total express business in the United States for 1909:

Gross express revenues, 1909		$132,599,190.92
Railway pay (48 per cent)		63,932,126.99
Operating expense (43 per cent)		56,273,055.29
Profits to express companies (8 per cent)		11,387,489.00
Taxes (1 per cent)		906,519.00
Proposed saving:
Railway pay (48 per cent)		None.
Operating expenses (17 per cent)		22,988,477.00
Profits (8 per cent)		11,387,489.00
Proposed cost and saving, average package.
Average express distance	miles	196
Average express package weight	pounds	32.80
Poroposed cost:
Railway pay (48 per cent)	$0.25
Operating expenses (26 per cent)	.13
		$0.38
Proposed saving:
Operating expenses (17 per cent)	.09
Profits (8 per cent)	.04
		.13
Cost of average express package		.51

Total proposed saving, 25 per cent.

It is very doubtful, indeed, whether the Government would make any saving whatever in operating expenses. Experience has shown that it costs the United States as much or more than private concerns to operate any large business.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman be irritated if I ask him a question at that point?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will not be irritated at all by any interruption the gentleman may make.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to inquire whether, when he considered his proposition to turn over the express business to the railroads of the United States, because of the fact that it was done in many cases by railways of other countries, he also considered the fact that in the other countries where the railroads transact the express business the number of proprietary railways is small, and in the United States it is large. In England, for example——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do not care to have the gentleman expound his proposition.

Mr. LEWIS. Just one moment. In England they have scarcely more operating railways than we have express companies. In the United States we have from 800 to 1,300 operating railways, and to turn over the express business to them, we would multiply the number of the express companies from 13 to 1,300.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Well, I have considered that subject and considered it carefully, and I think that the limited force of the application of the suggestion of the argument will be seen by every Member present from the fact that the statement that the gentleman has made of 1,300 railway companies in the United States is most astounding to all the membership of the House, if it be a correct statement, so little does it have to do with the transportation problem in the United States. We all very well know that between Chicago and the Atlantic there are only practically half a dozen railway systems, no matter how many subordinate corporations there may be entering into them, and this should also be considered. The average distance of the express package is 196 miles. It rarely goes over but one line of railroad. Of course, if it is transported from the Atlantic to the Pacific it may go over two railroads or possibly three. If you send a package from your home the average express package travels 196 miles and usually over one railroad or possibly two. It is only an exceptional occasion that you get more than two railroads even with the transportation from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and you never get to the 1,300 railroads which seems to embarrass the gentleman in his analytical study of this question.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. LEWIS. Is it not a fact that the Pennsylvania Railroad, generally considered as one railroad, keeps accounting for 100 subsidiary proprietary railways, and a package that travels over the Pennsylvania Railroad has 100 accounts to keep?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I am inclined to think that is so, and if so, it will apply just as surely upon express companies that now do the business. In other words, one of the reasons that makes the accounting so elaborate is this: That the express company tries to keep track of what it receives on every particular package for the purpose of apportioning it to the Pennsylvania Co. or the Baltimore & Ohio, or with other railroad companies that may take a package at all for transportation.

Now, I am not in favor of taking over that system by the Government. So long as the railroads get as their pay a certain per cent of the gross receipts under these contracts it is necessary to keep accounts of the receipts for each package. Now, a great effort is made to solve that problem. The Interstate Commerce Commission is working out a solution of that problem, and the solution of the problem is not to pay over a percentage on a particular package as the contracts require, but to pay a flat rate for so much tonnage just as we are paying in the postal system for the tonnage taken there. While upon that subject of accounting I may touch upon this. Much is made by the gentleman from Maryland in the development of his theory that the Government ought to take over these properties of the circumstance that the express companies keep an infinite accounting system; that this accounting system is expensive, and should be abolished. I have analyzed that with considerable study. There are two classes of accounts kept in this business. One of them is the account of the money received for the package so as to apportion it out to the railway companies, each of which is to get its percentage out of that particular package. There is one other branch of accounting, and no other of any consequence, and that is keeping track of the package itself to prevent loss. Now, then, if we do away with the express contract and make the railroad do the business you can do away with that part of the accounting; that is, to keep track of the money received upon each package, and have such a system as we have in the Post Office Department. When you do that you eliminate very much of the expense of accounting, but you do not eliminate the necessity of keeping track of valuable packages.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. The difficulty with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], as I understand, is in the keeping of accounts over the different roads handling the same express packages. They travel an average of 196 miles. The Government transports commerce as fourth-class mail matter, and the average haul is 687 miles. Does not, then, the difficulty of keeping the accounts increase with the number of roads handling express matter? Would the transfer of the business to the Government do away with the difficulty of keeping accounts?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. No. But it is set forth in the elaboration that there are 21 or 22 items of accounts that the express companies keep regarding every package, and that to do this business by the Post Office Department 15 of those processes could be eliminated by stamps. I am inclined to think that is true, but it can be eliminated by an express stamp as well as by a post-office stamp, provided you do away with these contracts.

In those contracts it is provided that the railroad company is to receive pay for its percentage on each particular item, and it makes an elaborate accounting necessary. If we were simply to step into the shoes of the express companies and do business with the railroad companies on that same percentage basis, we would have to keep the same accounts or something equivalent. Now, then, as to the accounts, to keep track of the safety of the parcels——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will now touch upon the question of keeping track of the packages, because it is fundamental, and it is a fundamental error in the assumption of the gentleman from Maryland that if the Post Office Department itself does the business you can do away with the accounting. You must keep track of the package itself in order to have safety in the transporting agencies. The Government now is not expected to carry any parcel-post business in valuable packages and is not an insurer of those packages above $30. But when it insures at all it is by the registry system, a system of keeping track of a package as the express company does.

Suppose we were to take over this great business. Property is sent daily by express to the value of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars. The gentleman says we are going to save all this expense of accounting. If we are not going to be absolutely reckless in looking after valuable property, the Government is to be the insurer of it. The express companies do it. The gentleman also says we are to insure express packages. Are we to propose a proposition so preposterous that we are to be the insurers as a Government of property running up into thousands and millions, the Government to be responsible for every dollar, and not to have some system of keeping track of those packages? If we have the safety we have to have the expense. So this idea of the——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has it been estimated as to the additional number of employees that will be required?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Upon the floor of the House the other day, in general debate, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asked the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] as to whether we would have to take over the 50,000 employees of the express companies in order to do the same business, and as I understood the answer of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], it was frankly to the effect that ultimately we would have to have about the same force. Of course, we all know our present postal force is working to the limit. I never see the heroic carriers of the United States passing through the streets of a city with armfuls of mail matter and a load over their backs that practically make them pack horses without realizing that we are working our men in the postal service now to the very limit, and it is absurd to think that we can put any other duties upon them in a new line.

Mr. MADDEN. Will it disturb the gentleman if I ask him this question? Suppose we took over the 50,000 employees now engaged in the express service, does the gentleman know what would be the average salary? Assuming it is $50 a month, it is fair to assume their salary would be increased to $100 a month if they were employed by the Government, is it not?

Mr. FOCHT. Would you apply the eight-hour system to them as well as all the local agents?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly. We could not do the business as cheaply as the express companies.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] if he objects to the eight-hour system?

Mr. FOCHT. Certainly not. But as we are considering the cost of this service, let us get down to the facts and not obscure such an important factor.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gross express receipts for the year 1909 were $132,000,000. They were distributed in the following way:

The railroad companies get for the single item of transportation nearly $64,000,000, or 48 per cent of the total. The operating expenses paid by the express companies are $56,000,000, or 43 per cent. Eight per cent, or $11,000,000, is profit to the express companies.

Now, this bill proposes to take over the express business and pay the railroad companies just the same amount as they are receiving under these contracts now. So long as these contracts are in force, we can not save anything on that branch of the business. On the operating expenses the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] considers that we can save $22,000,000. How fallacious that is I will call to your attention in a moment.

The profits can be saved if the Government can do the business as cheaply as the express companies do it and makes no charge for its service, and is willing to have no return on the money invested—the many million dollars of capital proposed to be expended in buying out the express companies.

Apply that to the ordinary package which it costs 51 cents to transport. The average distance carried is 196 miles. The average weight is 33 pounds. The average charge, as I say, is 51 cents. Apply the proposition to such a package, if it can be worked out, and see what it means on that package. The railway company would still get 25 cents. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] would save 9 cents on operating and still have 26 per cent of the operating expense to pay, and the problem then would work out that the cost of the transportation of the package would be 38 cents, and the saving on the package would be 13 cents out of 51 cents, and——

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know that that assumed operating expense takes into consideration the fact that probably $25,000,000 would be added to your salary list?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. No. It is based on the idea that the Government could operate this business more cheaply than the express companies.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] has already stated, in answer to a question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], that they would have to have practically the whole 50,000 employees now in the service of the express companies. I think that is right, but in order to save that $22,000,000, here are the items that he proposes to save: First, repair of vehicles. Instead of $680,000, the gentleman says we would spend only $226,000, and thus save $454,000 on the repair of vehicles.

Mr. MONDELL. On what basis?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is not elaborated. Anybody familiar with the upkeep of Government vehicles who can come to such a conclusion—that the Government can keep up its vehicles more cheaply than a private enterprise can—will be able to elucidate that proposition. I can not. But that is one of the items that we are to save in that $22,000,000.

One hundred thousand dollars will be saved in the renewal of vehicles. We are not going to renew as many vehicles as the express companies find it necessary to renew. Then there is stable equipment. The gentleman is going to reduce that item to $66,000, thereby making a saving of $132,000. Nearly all the stable expenses will be saved if the Government will keep these stables, it would appear, instead of the express companies.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I regret I can not yield now.

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman is endeavoring to make me ridiculous, and he ought to allow me to interrupt him to set him straight.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will be glad to be interrupted at any time by anybody who can throw light on this problem.

Here again is the item of office employees. The gentleman has already stated that we are going to keep them all. But here is to be a saving——

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman is not correct. The number of employees charged to the express companies in 1907 was 77,000. The majority of those were joint employees of the railroads and the express companies. They will be eliminated.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. They can not be eliminated. That is the most economical part of the express company expenses; the most economical expense that the express companies have. They pay a small compensation to the railroad agents in small towns to do the express business, and that is the cheapest service they can have.

Mr. LEWIS. And the local postmaster is there to do what the railroad agents would do.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes; and the local postmasters already have enough to do. They can not be expected to do more than they are now doing unless they have more pay.

Now, here are the other savings: He is going to make a saving of $4,500,000 on the salaries of office employees. Six million dollars is now paid out in commissions. That is what I referred to, speaking of the railroad agents doing business for the express companies. The gentleman from Maryland is going to do away with $3,500,000 of that expense. The next item is wagon employees. Out of $7,000,000 the gentleman is going to save $1,380,000.

Then he is going to reduce the rent of local offices from $2,000,000 to a little over $1,000,000. On stable supplies and expenses, whereas they are now $4,600,000, he is going to save just half. The rest of these savings proposed, that go into this $22,000,000, which is the only basis of any saving at all, are of just that character.

Mr. LEWIS. The statement the gentleman has just read as an estimate of savings was made not by myself, but by one of the most expert practical expressmen in the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That does not help it any in my estimation. I would have just as much respect for it if it emanated from the gentleman from Maryland as I would have for it coming from any other gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I should like two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I may already have wearied the patience of the committee with the discussion of this question. It is a vital question. It is bristling with facts and with theories. It can not be determined as a rider upon an appropriation bill. It is not expected that it will be. It is assumed that as a political proposition it has some value when attached to this bill. My estimate of the common sense of the American people is that it is sufficiently acute to look through this sort of a subterfuge. We are avoiding the real solution of the problem. We are proposing to give here just what the express companies and the railroad companies want, a substitution of the Government as paymaster and a continuation of the system under which the railroad companies are already getting twice as much as they ought to have for this service. [Applause.]

My solution is the one I have suggested. Above all things we ought not in this hasty way to embark the Government in the dark under an agreement to pay absolutely for this property.

One word upon that subject. If the Government was going into this business, the cheapest and best way it could do it would be to have nothing at all to do with the express companies, but to make its own contracts everywhere. The Great Northern Express Co. is the most profitable express company in the United States. Its returns show it to be. It has only $5,000 invested in real estate and only $80,000 in personal property. That company contracts with a responsible local man in every town to collect and deliver the express matter. That expense represents only 6 cents out of the 51 cents that the average package costs. That is all that is represented in the expense of collection and delivery. The Great Northern Co. contracts with a local man in each town, who may be under bond, to collect and deliver the packages. The result is that that express company, which is actually owned by the Great Northern Railroad Co., instead of turning back to the railroad company 48 per cent, which is the average throughout the United States, turns back 70 per cent of the gross receipts as profit every year. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has again expired.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] as much of 30 minutes as he may desire to use.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the questions that are presented for consideration in this bill are very serious ones. I can not take time now to discuss these questions at length, for the reason that so far I have not heard from gentlemen on the other side any authority in law for the propositions for which they contend.

It is stated here in the report of the committee that the power of Congress to deal with the subject, according to the method of the bill, is amply supported by the authorities. The citations that follow are, first:

> Contracts are properties, and as such may be condemned and taken under the law of eminent domain.

Certain authorities are cited for that proposition. I quite agree with that proposition, but that is not the end of the questions that we have to consider. It is true that you may by condemnation proceedings condemn a contract, but by such condemnation proceedings you end it. It is here proposed not that the contracts shall be ended but that they shall be continued. It is urged here, as I understand it, that to secure the contracts of the express companies with the railroad companies would be an exceedingly advantageous proposition, and therefore it is urged that the Government can, by condemnation proceedings, secure the benefit of these contracts. But in order to secure the benefits of these contracts we must secure a continuance of them. But the condemnation of a contract ends it.

Mr. LEWIS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to suggest what the gentleman may have overlooked, that even if his argument as to the death of the vitality of the contract by condemnation was true, the bill itself provides that after the 1st of July, when the Government takes the property, the railways shall perform the service they have customarily performed for the express companies. That remedies any defects in that respect.

Mr. TOWNER. That may be true; but if so, of what benefit to us are the provisions of this bill? Of what benefit to the Government are they? The Government then would have no greater power than it has now, and the bill gives the Government no greater power than it possesses inherently. If the Government has the power under the terms of this bill by condemnation proceedings to take the benefit of contracts—and this is what is contended for—that may be of some advantage to us providing the contracts that are now made are of such a nature as really constitute a benefit—that is, less than a reasonable rate. That is, as I understand it, the contention that is made.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that so far as I know there is no authority anywhere that by condemnation proceedings of a contract can you compel its continuance. The condemnation of a contract means that either party to it may appear and show how much it is damaged by the ending of the contract; it may show how it may be of disadvantage to it and what damages will result for its violation, because condemnation means a violation of the contract; it may show to what extent it has been injured by this act. That is the end of the entire transaction.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is it the gentleman's view that under condemnation proceedings of a contract like this between the express company and the railroad company, the effect of which would be to end the contract, that the Government would be answerable in damages to the railroad company for what they might lose?

Mr. TOWNER. Either party who may have been injured by the condemnation of a contract, or both parties, if they can show an injury, would have a right to compensation from the Government. Of course, upon the theory of these gentlemen the railroad company would not be injured, because, on their theory, the railroad company is carrying a disadvantageous contract. In other words, they are carrying for the express companies at a less rate than is profitable to them, so that I presume the railroad company would not be damaged in such a case as that.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the railroads are carrying at a loss?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know whether they are or not, but that seems to be the theory upon which gentlemen contend for the condemnation of these contracts.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I should not suppose they would continue to make contracts if they are carrying at a loss.

Mr. TOWNER. I have no contention to make with the gentleman from Michigan upon that proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The contention of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is that the present rate to the railroad company is about twice the normal rate, or about twice what it should be.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee and gentlemen on the other side who contend for this bill to the case of the West River Bridge Co. against Dix et al., which is a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, found in the Sixth of Howard, pages 507 and following.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What volume of the Supreme Court?

Mr. TOWNER. The forty-seventh volume of the Supreme Court decisions. That was a very important case. Gentlemen will all remember the doctrine that was established in the franchise case, the celebrated Dartmouth College case, in which it was held that a franchise was a contract. It was feared that that doctrine carried to its, perhaps, logical conclusion might make these franchises that had been granted by municipalities interminable, so that the Government was powerless under any circumstances to relieve itself from what might afterwards be found its unjust terms. This case came succeeding it. It was a very important case. Among the distinguished counsel who argued the case before the Supreme Court learnedly was Daniel Webster and Mr. Collamer and other distinguished lawyers.

I can not take the time of the committee to refer extensively to it, but it will repay study by gentlemen who are anxious to learn the limits of the doctrine that is now being considered by the committee in the consideration of this bill requiring the condemnation of a franchise.

I want to call attention to one clause of this decision, being the language of Justice McLean in the opinion found on page 557 of that report. It says:

> No State could resume a charter, under the power of appropriation, and carry on the functions of the corporation. A bank charter could not be thus taken and the business of the bank continued for public purposes. Nor could this bridge have been taken by the State, and kept up by it, as a toll bridge. This could not be called an appropriation of private property to public purposes. There would be no change in the use, except the application of the profits, and this would not bring the act within the power. The power must not only be exercised bona fide by a State, but the property, not its product, must be applied to public use.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I have heard it said repeatedly during this debate that none of these express companies, at least none of any importance, has any franchise which could be condemned.

Mr. TOWNER. I am coming to that in a moment.

Mr. COOPER. The authority the gentleman read was in condemnation of a franchise, and I wondered if it were applicable if the facts were as stated in this debate.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the proposition, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin will see, is the same and for this reason: The Supreme Court was considering then the question of the condemnation of a franchise as a contract. They were considering it upon the contention that was being made that this condemnation proceeding was a violation of a contract, and thus within the inhibition of the Constitution which provides that no law shall be passed which violates the obligations of contracts, and for that reason the principle is just the same.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the point the gentleman from Iowa has made, viz, ordinarily that property devoted already to public use may not be condemned and appropriated to a like public use.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; I think the gentleman is mistaken with regard to this being a public use. The court were considering in this case the property of a private corporation that operated a tall bridge, and, therefore, it was the condemnation of private property.

Mr. LEWIS. Has the gentleman, however, seen the Monongahela case, in which the Supreme Court decided in terms that a railway moving traffic from Harrisburg, Pa., to Youngstown, Ohio, might be condemned by the Government and taken over and its functions employed, and the case of Wilson v. Shaw, in which the Government actually took the Panama Railway and is now operating it?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; but those cases, I think the gentleman will find, will not help him any in his contention. The facts are that in those cases everything that was taken was in fact an end of the existing status, and that is just what will be the case here. There is no question at all but that the Government can take over property that heretofore has been used for a certain purpose by an individual or a corporation and use it itself, perhaps for the same purpose, but that does not answer the difficulty that there is in this case, because here we have the contention that we can take over by condemnation a contract, and at the same time take the benefit of its terms and compel the railroad company to carry it out.

I want to come to another question that, it seems to me, there is a very serious legal difficulty about, and I have not yet been satisfied with any authorities that have been suggested by gentlemen who have filed these statements of cases and authority, and that is this: It seems to be contended by gentlemen who favor this bill that because these companies are not incorporated there will be no condemnation of a franchise. In other words, that we will not have to pay them anything for a franchise. I have not seen any authority that will bear out that contention. Neither do I believe that it can be justified upon any principle of law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The railroad companies are chartered as common carriers. The express companies are not chartered as common carriers. Have the railway companies a right to sublet, as a matter of law, their chartered rights as common carriers?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know that I quite get the point of the gentleman's question, but if I understand it, and if what is meant by the gentleman is as to whether or not the express companies have the right to be placed in the places of the railway companies and take their privileges, I certainly say not, under the law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The question that I have in mind is this: Have the railway companies, which are chartered as common carriers, the legal right to make the contracts they now make with the express companies?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I have not considered that question and I would not like to venture an opinion on it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If it should turn out a matter of fact that a common carrier, chartered as such, would have no legal right to sublet that chartered right to an unincorporated or a corporated concern which was not chartered as a common carrier, and doing an independent business as a common carrier, would it have any such right as would be protected in the way suggested in the case of the West Bridge Co. v. Dix et al. (47 U. S.), just cited by the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not feel qualified to answer the question. I want to call the attention, however, of the committee to this proposition. It is not a question of whether or not in a condemnation proceeding under the right of eminent domain it is a franchise or what it is. That has nothing really to do with the question to be considered. After all, the right of condemnation is the right of condemning property. It is held that contracts are property because they are of value, and their value can be ascertained in money. It has been said that a franchise is property because its value can be ascertained in money. There can be no question but that if the Government takes away from another by the right of eminent domain a thing that is of value, and whose value can be ascertained and determined, the Government must respond for such value.

It makes no difference whether these companies are individuals or whether they are joint-stock associations or voluntary associations or corporations holding franchises. That is not the question. They have an existence, and are parties to a contract right, between themselves and the railroad company, which it is now proposed to end.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman kindly yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. In just a moment. And there can be no possible way in which that contract can be ended that will not compel the Government to respond in damages to the uttermost dollar of the value that is taken. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland.
